The Democratic State Convention assembled here to-day, and it was the largest and most stormy ever held. Two thousand delegates were present. On the sixth ballot, R. R. V. WILSON, of Hudson, was nominated for Governor. The next highest competitor was CHARLES FRENCH, of Mercer. The ANTI-Lecompton and Lecompton delegates of Sussex had a long and tedious fight in regard to their admittance, and finally both withdrew. The resolutions favor Popular Sovereignty, and oppose the opening of the Slave trade. The nomination of Mr. WILSON was made unanimous.—There is great rejoicing among his friends.

Conflagrations.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN NEW-BEDFORD.

NEW-BEDFORD, Wednesday, Aug. 24—9 P. M.

A large conflagration is now raging in this city. Thus far it has consumed the planing mill of BROWN & HATHAWAY, together with a very large quantity of stock, both raw and manufactured, and also numerous shops and dwelling-houses. The fire is still spreading, and threatens the destruction of much property.

NEW-BEDFORD, Wednesday, Aug. 24—P. M.

The fire which broke out about noon to-day in North Water-street, destroyed about twenty-five buildings, and was finally arrested on Key and North streets, by blowing up several buildings with gunpowder.

The buildings destroyed included HATHAWAY & Son's machine-shop and planing-mill; RUSSE & BROWN's spar-yard; SOUSANE's turning mill; N. H. NYE's ship-chandlery; EDWARD M. ROBINSON's oil-yard, in which 2,000 bbls. of oil were destroyed, besides some lots of oil belonging to W. G. E. POTT, B. B. HOWLAND, and DAVID R. KEMP.

Several dwellings, carpenters' shops and groceries, are also included in the conflagration.

A large number of bomb-lances in the premises of WILCOX & HATHAWAY caused loud explosions, as did the burning of the oil casks.

The ship John and Edward, lying at WILCOX & ROBINSON's wharf, was burned to the water's edge.

The ship Illinois was also on fire, but was towed out and saved with the loss of sails, rigging, etc.

Several persons were injured, but none fatally.

The total loss is variously estimated at from $200,000 to $300,000, on which the insurance is small.

Many families are rendered penniless by the conflagration, and several outfits of whaling vessels are ruined by the loss of their oil on storage.

The Gallatin (Tenn.) Examiner says: Col. James Glover, of the California Overland Mail Company, informs us of the existence of a remarkable spring, on his route, 200 miles east of El Paso, on the road leading to San Antonio. It is fully 150 feet in diameter, and has been sounded to the depth of 2,000 feet without finding bottom. The surface is as smooth as that of a mountain lake. It breaks out, running about three miles, when it disappears, and again six miles distant reappears, forming a stream fifteen to twenty feet deep in many places. It is slightly impregnated with alkali, and contains five varieties of fish. It is called the Leon Hole.

NEWS FROM OREGON, WASHINGTON AND NEVADA.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, July 29, 1859.

The steamer Sonora, of the mail line, arrived yesterday afternoon from Panama with the mails and passengers from New-York the 8th inst. The Grisabe, of the opposition line, came in towards midnight. She left Panama earlier than the Sonora, but was passed by the latter on the way. The passengers by both vessels arrived in good health.

During the last ten days, as you will have noticed quite a fleet of clippers arrived from New-York and Boston, laden with every description of merchandise to glut our already over-stocked market. The fine ships of WILLIAM T. COLEMAN & Co.'s line maintain their old reputation for quick trips, and for bringing their cargoes to port in excellent condition. The Meteor, for instance, came in the other day in only 111 days from New-York—an excellent passage for this season, when the stormy Cape is necessarily doubled during the rigors of the Winter. Among the shipments by the Meteor to this port was a superb piano, made by STEINWAY & SONS, of your City, and which, upon being set up after its sea trip, was found in as perfect tune as when it left the factory. This is due not only to the superiority of its workmanship, but to the ship as well—for a poor vessel, with heated, sweating or leaking holds could not deliver so delicate an instrument in such excellent order.

The Republican Convention of San Francisco and San Mateo counties have nominated T. G. PHELPS, of San Mateo, for re-election to the State Senate. They have also nominated for the State Senate Judge CALEB BURBANK. Both of these gentlemen doubtless will be elected.

The notorious WM. HAMILTON, alias "Billy the boat man," who was exiled formerly by the San Francisco Vigilance Committee, was seriously, if not fatally stabbed on Wednesday last, in the course of a row with two sailors, named THOMAS CLINGER and JAMES MCCABE. The facts appear to be, that HAMILTON knocked one of the men down with a piece of wood, because he brushed against him in passing. Subsequently CLINGER and MCCABE followed him, when HAMILTON again assailed them, and was stabbed in the melée. The knife entered his back under the left shoulder-blade, penetrating the cavity of the chest. HAMILTON was a desperate rowdy, and nobody will regret his death, which now seems almost certain. CLINGER was arrested and held to answer, but MCCABE escaped.

The last mining news from Walker River is of a most flattering character. Some new diggings have recently been discovered there at a place known as Dry Gulch, and although the dirt has to be carried to the water, a distance of 200 yards, the miners are making from $10 to $25 per day, with common rockers.

We have intelligence of a serious outbreak of the Mojave Indians on the Colorado. An extra of the Los Angeles Star announces the arrival of an express from Major ARMISTEAD's command at Beale's Crossing, with the following particulars:

"It appears that Major ARMISTEAD had orders from Gen. CLARKE to demand the hostages who had lately escaped from Fort Yuma; that he had had a talk with the Indians on the subject, and was determined to arrest the runaways or chastise the whole tribe.

In the meantime, an agent of the Mail Company, (Stockton and Kansas City,) was collecting his animals, and had them near the military post; the Indians, fearing the execution of the punishment justly their due, run off these animals, sixteen in number, and made their escape. At first it was supposed the mules had strayed away, but on searching for them they could not be found; three of them, however, returned to camp, and with them the men in charge were removing their provisions to the post, when they were attacked by a band of Indians, numbering at least two hundred, who carried off two of the mules, all the provisions, and everything else they could lay hands on.

On information being given to Major ARMISTEAD of the outrage, he immediately dispatched Lieut. MARSHALL, with twenty men, in search of the Indians, who returned and reported he could not find them.

Major ARMISTEAD, when the express left, was preparing to cross the river with his command, and march down on the California side, to attack the villages, and if no Indians were found, then burn the huts and destroy the crops. He is determined to inflict such chastisement on them as shall keep the remnant of them quiet for all time.

There were a number of Indians about the post, but they disappeared immediately after the outbreak.

Major ARMISTEAD has two companies of the Sixth in his command, numbering about one hundred and eighty men.

The herder in charge of the mules, a Mexican, is missing. He has either gone off with the Indians or been killed.

The San Francisco Bulletin reports the murder of a Californian on the Plains by the Crow Indians. The following particulars are given:

GERMAN DAVIS, of New-York, who has just arrived in this city overland, viâ the South Pass, informs us that on June 17, while passing up the Sweetwater River, near South Pass, his party discovered a man named C. H. Hall, lying in the road mortally wounded. They took him up and carried him with them till June 19, when he died. From the wounded man Mr. DAVIS obtained the following narrative, which he has kindly furnished us:

"On April 20th, Mr. C. H. HALL, of Cincinnati, Ohio; GEORGE STEPHENSON, of Pittsburg, Pa.; DAVID MOORE, of Lancaster County, Pa.; and Capt. HENRY FLORENCE, of Carlisle, Pa., left Sacramento with the intention of going to the East overland. After reaching the Sweetwater River on the 15th, MOORE fell sick and the party halted in a cañon on the banks of the river, about fifty miles from South Pass. On the third day of their halt they were surprised by a party of Crow Indians.

They were all sleeping, when the Indians stole in upon their camp, and, seizing the guns, fired upon the sleepers, killing STEPHENSON and MOORE, and fatally wounding HALL, who was shot through the shoulder and hip. Capt. FLORENCE sprang upon an Indian who carried a club. At this point of the affair HALL fainted. When he returned to consciousness again he found that the tent was rifled of its contents and himself stripped of all of his clothing. Upon turning his eyes aside he saw Capt. FLORENCE standing, bound hand and foot, about ten yards distant, and the Indians holding a council in their own language a few yards further off. In a short time they led Capt. FLORENCE away, and soon afterwards HALL heard the trampling of horses.

The Indians had gone off with their prisoner, leaving HALL, whom they supposed to be dead, without clothing or food. Although mortally injured, he managed in the course of a couple of days to walk half a mile and reached the main road, where he fell and remained two days, when Mr. DAVIS and his party passed and picked him up.

The party spent some time in seeking for the Indians and Capt. FLORENCE, but without avail. All that could be found was a trail leading in the direction of the Crow nation. Capt. FLORENCE belonged to the Masonic fraternity.

California politics continued in an excited state. At Yreka, in the extreme north, on the 26th, BAGNERIST and J. C. MCKIBBEN were escorted into town from the Forest House, six miles distant. The escort numbered over one hundred persons, in carriages and on horseback. The city was full of people, and it was agreed on all hands that the meeting was the largest ever held there. This was the general reception of BAGNERIST everywhere. At Quincy, Plumas county, he said to the crowd:

I here accuse Dr. GWIN of having been the PAID AGENT of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. [Tumultuous cheering, and cries of "That's true!" and "By G—d we all know it!"]

I also accuse him of having supported the Thirty Million Secret Fund Bill, when he knew that it was the intention to use that money as a corruption fund, in order to carry the next Presidential election; [great shouting, and cries of "Split on him! split on him!"] either to elect "Jimmy Buchanan" or Mr. Slidell, of Louisiana, with whom he coöperated in the United States Senate.

The Mariposa Gazette has the following:

"Col. FREMONT is at last, to some extent, out of trouble, as we are happy to know. He has settled his principal matters of difficulty, and is out of the hands of the 'Sabeans' and Pawn-breaking capitalists. He has means to go on with his improvements, and will build a new quartz mill upon the Merced River, for which he has ample water-power. His mills now running are yielding very handsomely, as we are informed."

LOWER CALIFORNIA.

While our paper is at press, says the San Diego Herald, of July 23, we learn from R. K. FOSTER, Esq., just arrived from Ensenada de Camanche, Lower California, that the later attempt of one JUAN MEMDOSA to pick up a revolution, was a signal failure.

As soon as Don FERNANDO ESPARRAGA who is Gefe-Político during the absence of Col. CASERO, received a letter from MEMDOSA, informing him that the latter had documents which entitled him (MEMDOSA) to the office filled by ESPARRAGA, he sent a peremptory order to Judge VIDAL that said MEMDOSA must appear before him in Santa Domingo, near the port of San Quentin, within eight days, with all said papers. If voluntary, all right, if not, por la fuerza. It is generally hoped and expected, says our informant, that MEMDOSA will be sent out summarily from the lower country, and that a worse fate will probably befall him if he does not "hurry up his cakes."

OREGON.

Dates from Oregon are to July 22. Full returns of the Congressional election are given, with the following result: LOGAN, (Rep.) 5,291; STOUT, (Adm.) 5,300. STOUT elected by nine majority, out of 10,591 votes cast.

There is interesting news from Walla Walla. News from Lieut. MULLAN has been received there up to the 10th inst. He was getting along well with his road. News had reached Walla Walla that a large body of Fraser River miners had arrived at Colville, and were scattering off into the mountains north, in the pursuit of gold. New gold discoveries had been made up in gulches of the mountains, and miners were averaging from one-half to one ounce per day to the man. Great encouragement is felt there respecting these mines.

Large quantities of goods are going up to that section from the Dalles. Indians and half-breeds about Colville, all seem to have a good supply of gold dust, and offer it in trade for goods. It is thought the recent influx of miners from Fraser, (many of whom are among the most experienced miners of California,) will develop those mines far more fully than ever before developed, and establish the conviction of the existence of gold there in large quantities. Recent developments show conclusively the existence of gold in paying quantities near the Bitter Root Valley.

WASHINGTON.

The official returns of the election for Delegate from Washington Territory to Congress, give SCHNEBLY (Democrat) 430 majority over WALLACE (Republican.)

Gov. GROTSON arrived at Olympia on the 12th of July, and took the oath of office on Thursday, 14th, reëstablished by the Hon. O. B. MCFARSE, Chief Justice.

Gen. HARNEY was at Olympia on the 19th July on a tour to the military posts of Washington Territory.

NEVADA.

A dispatch from Nevada, July 27, says:

"The Committee appointed by Convention to canvass the vote for Delegate to Congress, have just reported that the whole number of votes cast is 817—for CRAMER, 439; for DONOVAN, 378—CRAMER's majority, 61. The election will probably be contested.

From Our Own Correspondent.

OLD POINT COMFORT, Va., Monday, Aug. 22, 1859.

Soon after the organization of our Government it became apparent to its founders that though remote from the Old Continent, our distance might not avert a participation in the wars that the French Revolution had spread over the rest of Christendom; and accordingly a very large amount of money was expended on forts and batteries at the principal sea-port towns. But it was not until after the war of 1812 that the Government, impressed with the weakness of the system on which they had been obliged to depend and the great additional expenditures they had been obliged to incur in large assemblages of troops and in various temporary devices, determined to enter promptly upon an adequate permanent system of coast defences.

To this end experienced naval and engineer officers were directed to make a close examination of the whole coast, and select points necessary to be occupied by fortresses. This being what is called the third system, has been under construction 40 years and has met the support of each succeeding Administration.

The fortifications at this point cover primarily the great Southern naval establishment near Norfolk—Norfolk itself, and all the country lying on James River, from attacks by water. They cover also the anchorage of Hampton Roads, and should an enemy attempt to approach the Navy-yard at Norfolk from a landing in Lynnhaven Bay, these forts allow the succor that will flow down James River to be landed in his rear, cutting off retreat to his ships. They also allow a light squadron, anchored in Hampton Roads, to cover the whole of Chesapeake Bay and its tributary rivers from the predatory enterprises of any smaller squadron.

The first thing which strikes the eye of the visitor to this old Point, is the frowning battlements of fortress Monroe, the largest fortification in the country, and the great centre of the line extending along the Atlantic coast. The stranger hastens to take a strol upon the ramparts, from which he has a charming view of the open sea as it comes swelling through the capes of Virginia. He turns to inspect the heavy armament, and to witness the exercises with field and siege guns which are taking place within the immense inclosure.

Among the officers appointed to locate and arrange the system of coast defences was Gen. BERNARD, a favorite Engineer of the Emperor NAPOLEON, who had been invited to this country through the influence of Mr. GALLATIN, and to the enlarged views of this officer is Fort Monroe indebted for her present magnificent proportions. He would have constructed a work of three times the size, but was overruled by the other members of the Board, and as a compromise Fort Monroe was given her present limits. This fortification is now completed and sports her immense armament of 42 8-inch columbiads, 74 42-pound guns, 20 20-pound howitzers, all which are casemated, 5 10-inch columbiads, (this gun weighs 15 500 pounds, and throws a ball weighing 128 pounds,) 5 10-inch columbiads, 42 8-inch do., 73 42 pound guns, 15 32-pound guns, 28 24-pound guns, 16 12-pound guns, all which are embrasures; also 2 10-inch siege mortars, 4 8-inch siege mortars and 3 stone mortars, used for throwing stones; these are of brass, and have a bore 16 inches in diameter. Also, 10 Coehorn's brass 24-pounders, 5 8-inch siege howitzers, and the following field cannon: 4 12-pound guns, 4 6-pounders, 2 24-pound howitzers, 2 12-pound do.

This armament was fixed by a Board of Officers appointed in 1854 to arrange and determine the armaments of all the permanent fortifications in the United States.

The garrison is to consist of eight companies of artillery, seven of which are already here. The other will report so soon as its ranks have been filled by recruits, as already stated in the telegraphic column of the TIMES. The post is under the command of Col. HARVEY BROWN, who distinguished himself in the Mexican war.

The work of constructing Fort Calhoun, known as the "Rip Raps," which had been discontinued for a number of years in consequence of the uncertain foundation, has been resumed. The subsidence of the work reached its termination in 1857, when the weight of stone was removed and the walls again commenced under the superintendence of Col. DE RUSSY, one of the most distinguished Engineers of this or any other country, assisted by an able corps of subordinates, among whom I beg to notice Mr. FRANCIS MAHONEY, a civil engineer who has worked his way up from the position of stone cutter until he occupies the highest rank among mathematicians.

Fort Calhoun, when completed, will be an imposing structure, fifty feet above water, with three tiers of guns of the largest calibre. The stone now being used is a superior article of granite from the Richmond quarries.

The Board to test the relative merits of severe newly-invented rifle-cannon will resume its proceedings in a few days, as the additional guns and projectiles have arrived. The experiments thus far satisfy the Board of undoubted improvement in range and accuracy.

Ex-President TYLER gave an elegant reception to his friends last week, and "Villa Margarete" was thronged with a crowd of lively guests. Mr. Justice WAYNE, of the United States Supreme Court, was among the guests. Among the guests at the Hygeia Hotel I notice Lieutenant Governor MONTAGUE, who seems to be a gentleman of great modesty of demeanor, and one slow of speech. He would not be selected from a crowd as either a great man, or one calculated to excite popular enthusiasm. He reports Governor LETCHER as much improved in health.

It is amusing to hear the friends of the Hon. JOHN M. BOTTS scheming and planning to secure his nomination by the Republican Party. They have succeeded, certainly, in satisfying themselves that BOTTS is to be the next President of the United States.

The Hygeia Hotel is still full, but not crowded, and, though many leave, others are constantly arriving. Everything is now in a state of feverish excitement, owing to the grand fancy dress and masquerade ball which takes place here on Thursday next. One leading feature of this ball is, Ex-President TYLER heads the list of managers. A brilliant affair is anticipated.

The belles of Old Point this season have been as numerous as they have been beautiful and attractive. The yacht Haswell, of Providence, R. I., left this morning, with a lively crew to return, carrying a number of Knights Templars, who had been on a visit to Richmond. The yacht is a little beauty. May she reach her port in safety. Q.

THE PRESIDENT'S CONFIDENCE MEN.

The Secret Agent to California and his Ways.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Aug. 23, 1859.

The newspapers will have informed you that Mr. BUCHANAN's penchant for the Hellenic race is not confined to the individual who will soon have to measure intellectual swords with the shrewd and oily Sir WILLIAM GORE OUSELEY. Another Greek, although from an entirely different latitude, and by no means of a kindred character with the learned professor, has been found willing and ready to serve his adopted country, for a consideration, and at an enormous sacrifice of personal convenience. The person in question is familiarly known in the "city of magnificent distances" by the euphonious cognomen of "Paddy" MCGUIRE, otherwise appellated, JAMES MCGUIRE, a bird of decidedly different feathers from the popular auctioneer of that name. JAMES alias "Paddy" MCGUIRE, is, moreover, known to fame as Capt. JAMES MCGUIRE, of that ilk, and among his intimate bar-room associates, which latter are more numerous than select, by the more high-sounding title of Col. MCGUIRE, although, by what feats of arms or military service he has earned either of these proud distinctions, the Muse of History has altogether failed to inform us. This, however, is nothing to the point in question, which simply concerns the appointment of JIM, otherwise PADDY MCGUIRE, as a secret agent to California, the matter of his antecedents or fitness for the place being entirely irrelevant to our purpose, as it no doubt was to the object which President BUCHANAN had in view. Whether this special mission has reference to the War of the Roses which is now raging with so much acharnement between the Gwin and Broderick factions in that fructiferous region, and threatens to give us a new illustration of the lamented fate of the Kilkenny cats, is not for me to determine, as I have been for years thoroughly and intimately acquainted with the great and little characters which infest the political highways of Washington. I will endeavor to give you some insight into the new public character which the magic wand of President BUCHANAN has just called into existence.

Colonel, or we should say Capt. MCGUIRE, though more familiarly denominated "Paddy," is, as you may infer without any comment of my own, a native of that delectable isle, which has supplied this benighted country with so many disinterested patriots. He commenced his American career as a sutler to some companies of the Marines, during the famous Florida War, in which capacity, if he did not succeed in realizing a fabulous pile, as many Emeralders of less pretensions have done, he continued to create around him an element of such intense and fervid heat, that he was very soon compelled to vamose the Marine rancho, with a broad, long plume of purest white streaming in his rear. "Paddy" MCGUIRE's genius, however, was of a kind which could not long endure the confinement of a napkin or even a bushel, and having arrived at this conclusion, that Washington was the very spot for a man of his parts and extreme modesty to luxuriate in, to Washington he came accordingly. A fascinating widow, with a fascinating lot of human chattels, of every shape, size and complexion at her disposal, very soon attracted the attention of our sensitive Milesian, which resulted in the whole lot, widow, niggers and all, being knocked down to him, and transferred to his conjugal keeping.

The company of the widow, however, now rejoicing in the sonorous and enviable appellation of Mrs. MCGUIRE, and the more enduring attractions of a rent-roll, derived from the hire and barter of the human chattels aforesaid, did not quite fill up the measure of "Paddy" MCGUIRE's ambition; although independent of his military dignities, he had established, on an imperishable foundation, the significant title of "Bladderskite" MCGUIRE, from a laudable propensity to unbosom himself at all times, either in season or out of season. The soul of "Paddy" MCGUIRE sighed for the troubled waters of political life, and to politics he accordingly betook himself. But although he fretted himself almost into the likeness of a mop-stick in his efforts to improve his sphere of usefulness during the Presidency of JAMES K. POLK, it was only under the more congenial auspices of FRANKLIN PIERCE that he succeeded in making himself felt and appreciated. During the political canvass which preceded that gentleman's elevation to the Presidential chair, "Paddy" MCGUIRE sought every possible means by which Democratic notoriety could be achieved and finally hit upon the plan of pouring the vials of his vituperation upon the venerated head of Gen. SCOTT, whom, by way of culmination, in a brochure replete with vulgar abuse, he stigmatized as a wretch. The hit was tremendous. Although the respectable men of the Democratic Party spurned all affiliation with a creature who could be guilty of so disgusting a solecism, the masses applauded the dead à gorge déployée, and Gen. PIERCE rewarded the ribald slanderer with a postal agency. Who will say now that Republics are ungrateful?

I have not been able to obtain any reliable information as to the nature of the services which PADDY MCGUIRE has rendered to JAMES BUCHANAN, to entitle him to this last mark of Executive favor; but to employ a man on a secret service of any kind, who has acquired an unenviable reputation for loquacity, and is every where known as the leakiest vessel into which the ingredients of human confidence were ever poured, is another proof of that extraordinary tact and adroitness which have characterized the action of the present Chief Magistrate whenever the necessity has arisen for sending men upon any service requiring the utmost discretion and self-adaptation to circumstances. It is one of these eccentric freaks in the policy of a ruler which a French politician would designate by a livelier term than folly.

ALGERINE.

The Mexican Question in the British Cabinet.

From the London Morning Post, (Ministerial Organ.)

The condition of Mexico for several years past has been a scandal and disgrace to the civilized world. If we are asked for proof of this assertion we have only to refer to those gross and infamous outrages upon life and property which have marked the successes of the various chieftains who in that country have obtained the temporary possession of power, so long as violence was confined to Mexican subjects neither England, France, Spain, nor the United States had the slightest right or excuse to interfere. But the citizens of all these Powers have been exposed to exactly the same cruelty and oppression as native Mexicans. Some of the former have been shot in cold blood; contributions from foreigners under the pain of instant death, have been exacted and the flag of England has given no protection to British subjects resident within the Republic. Treasure destined for exportation has been seized in transitu, and, as a necessary consequence, the payment of the foreign debt of Mexico has been rendered a measure of impossibility. In the presence of these facts the English and United States Ministers have agreed to differ. Mr. OTWAY and Mr. MCLANE cannot concur in any common course of policy, and the British Government, with that spirit of fair play which must be considered most satisfactory by the United States Cabinet, has determined to institute an inquiry into the conduct of its representative, Mr. OTWAY. All the four Powers have, for some time, had squadrons on the Mexican coast, but no effectual reparation has been obtained. We can easily understand that system of mutual check which an exhibition of separate naval forces may present. The Government of the United States has now tried diplomacy; and, if the intelligence received by the last American mail be correct, Mexico, from one end to the other, will speedily be as much an integral portion of the great Northern Republic as Texas and California. We hear that a treaty has been concluded between the United States and Mexico, which gives to the former a right of way "between the Rio Grande and the Gulf of California, with guarantees for their protection and safety." This article is no doubt intended to facilitate the construction of the railroad, the line of which an American expedition three years ago surveyed and proved to be easily feasible. Next, "the right of way and valuable privileges of transit" are secured to this American company holding the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. We do not quarrel with the Cabinet at Washington for obtaining means of communication across the continent of North America, which will largely tend to develop the military power and the commercial prosperity of the United States. But the American Government has secured "the right of transporting troops to protect them in default of Mexico fulfilling that duty." This amounts to right of direct military intervention, but this right is even more indirectly embedded in a subsequent article, which provides that by another treaty the United States may exercise "a protectorate over Mexico." Considering the state of repine and violence which has too long been suffered to exist in the Republic, the protectorate of the United States is perhaps the best and most natural solution which can be suggested of a most difficult complication. But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that of the foreign debt of Mexico eight millions out of ten are held by British subjects. If, by the convenient and peaceable process which this treaty provides, Mexico is destined to fall under the protection of the United States—the first step to virtual annexation—what guarantee will the British holders of the Mexican debt have that the doctrine of repudiation will not be disagreeably and unjustly extended from the North to the far South? On political and social grounds we think that Mexico as a portion of the United States, would offer a more safe and valuable field for British commerce than in its present chronic condition of violence, revolution and lawlessness. But her Majesty's Ministers will neglect the interests of the capitalists of this country, and at the same time fully admit the Monroe doctrine, if they permit the Government of the United States to have its own way with respect to the political organization of Mexico. If we consider monetary and commercial interests, the people of this country have more direct and immediate concern with Mexico than with Italy. Fortunately the question has not fallen into the utterly incompetent hands of Lord ELCHO, who wishes, with respect to Italy, to substitute for the responsibility of the executive a vote of the House of Commons, which must in every case at present be premature and wholly unnecessary. We trust that the Mexican bondholders will make their case heard, and require the Government not to concur in any American protectorate over the republic of Mexico until the foreign debt in which they are so deeply interested, has been fully and amply guaranteed.

The Atlantic Telegraph—A Suggestion worth Considering.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Aug. 23, 1859.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Did it ever occur to you that in the laying of the Atlantic Telegraph Cable, the injury was done which finally destroyed its power of working?

I have examined every article published by you, on the subject of this great experiment, but I have never yet seen anything which seemed to satisfactorily explain the cause of failure.

On the day of the celebration, I obtained a piece of the cable, (the first I had seen,) when it struck me that a miracle almost must have been performed if some four or five miles of such wire had been suspended (even in water) without parting the bundle of copper wires running through its centre. I called the attention of several friends to the remarkable fact—for such it seemed to be at the time—and concluded that those seven little wires (the conducting wires) had really supported the entire cable.

I think, on examination, that you will notice that the spiral wires covering the elastic packing are susceptible of being elongated to a much greater extent than it is possible for the copper or conducting wires to yield without breaking.

Now, it is generally supposed that the turn of the covering wires is so moderate that but little lengthening of the cable can take place; but when we consider that four miles of the cable is to be taken into consideration, and that these covering wires rest upon a yielding substance, we see at once the possibility of its great extension.

Now let us suppose the conducting wires have parted; it is not probable they have all broken in the same spot, but like a bundle of threads slightly twisted and drawn until broken, each has parted at its weakest point. As soon as the strain is withdrawn, by the cable's reaching the bed of the ocean, the elasticity of the covering restores the divided ends in a juxtaposition, and the magnetic circle is complete and messages are transmitted, but as the cable settles in its position, a strain is again produced from some elevated points, and the conducting wires being again separated the circle is broken and the cable becomes useless.

If this be the case with the wire which has been the subject of so much anxiety, how easily it might be obviated in the construction of another, by giving the conducting wire coil enough within the packing to yield to any strain that might come upon it. And I believe that many of those instances where communication could not be had between the vessels while the cable was being laid were caused by the separation of the conducting wires only.

Yours respectfully,

ISAAC L. WELSH.

A Sufferer at Suffern.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A man killed! N'importe? We are getting used to that sort of thing. We are fast becoming indifferent to railroad slaughters; we hear and read of them with perfect coolness, always supposed none of our friends or relatives were in the cars to which the "accident" happened. Killed! We ask how many? and faintly utter a surprise that there was not twice the number torn and mangled, when we consider the dread ul circumstances by which the fated passengers were surrounded. I felt this sort of surprise myself Mr. Editor, when, this morning, after running a man down near Nanuet Station, on the Suffern and Piermont branch of the Erie Road, I felt the cars tearing over a track which is not fit for a hand-car, to say nothing of a heavily loaded train. There had been a slight, aye, but a very slight delay, by the destruction of that one human life, but a much longer one had been caused by supplying the engine at the aforesaid station with its element of life from a huge pile of wood. On we went, for we had to make up for lost time. The rickety old cars fairly leaped over a track as rough as a country road, where the turnpike shovel has been at work. We turned the fearful curve at Blauveltsville at full run, made the run from this village to Piermont at the rate of forty miles an hour, (I timed them,) and, as I said before, I found myself agreeably surprised to reach the pier with sound limbs, and with but one fellow being far behind us in the agonies of death.

Let me go a little further on to the causes of this surprise. The Erie Railroad seems to have no kind of sympathy any longer for us poor Rocklanders, since its directors have made up their mind to withdraw all traffic from the Suffern branch, and locate their freight dépôt near Jersey City. They do but little if anything for us, from which we, in our travels, could derive any benefit. If the track is so much out of repair on our branch as to render the passing of freight trains absolutely impossible, the repair is done by substituting for the defective rails such as on the main line of the Erie have been taken up as unsafe, and consequently have been virtually condemned. In some parts the iron has been completely worn through, one half of its surface having literally peeled off and laying by the side of the track, in appearance like as many pieces of tinfoil. In other portions of the road the timbers have given way, and the rails have consequently "caved in" to such an extent that you feel in passing over it as though the car indulged in the innocent pastime of rushing through a rut. This is particularly the case near the great curve to which I referred before, a curve which should be passed only with the exercise of the greatest amount of caution, whereas it is never passed at a slower pace than any other part of this road. Ask the conductor and engineer, and they will tell you what all conductors and engineers say: "We have to be on time, and the company makes no allowance for wooding up or for a rough track!" This is our consolation, Mr. Editor. The Directors will rather see our lives put in jeopardy than mend the road or allow time enough to pass it in its present state without positive danger. Hence my surprise this morning at being safely landed, and you would have shared it had you been along. But if within a reasonable time you hear of the destruction of a whole train on our road, I trust that this timely notice of the causes which brought it about will make you look upon the matter with the eye of a philosopher, and as a foregone conclusion.

Horrible Murder and Suicide—A Maniac's Case in Galveston.

From the Galveston (Texas) News, Aug. 10.

A terrible tragedy was enacted in our city on Sunday last. The circumstances of the case are as follows: THOS. CHAMBERLAIN, a stevedore, residing in New-Orleans, arrived here Sunday morning, on the steamer Omega, in pursuit of his wife, who had left him some two weeks previous for this city, taking with her $150 belonging to the husband. On his arrival he ascertained that she was stopping at a house of ill-fame on Broadway; he at once proceeded to the place and had an interview with her; he asked her to return to New-Orleans with him; this she positively refused to do. An altercation then took place, he drawing a dagger and stabbing her in the neck and breast. This affray took place on a bed in a wing of the house on the ground floor. After being stabbed as above stated, she jumped out of the window and ran (covered with blood that was streaming from her person) to the parlor door, pursued by her husband with a loaded pistol. She was admitted by one of the girls and the door closed on her pursuer. He, however, forced it open, and, presenting his pistol, threatened any one who interfered with him with instant death. The women ran out into the street crying murder. He then pursued his already wounded wife into the back parlor, from where was heard in proceed two rapid shots, accompanied with a heavy fall.

Deputy-Marshal WM. PROWSE happening to be in the vicinity, attracted by the cries of murder, at once proceeded to the spot, and found the two lying side by side, he having shot her through the left breast, and himself in the head. Her dress was on fire, but so sure had been the aim that neither stirred from where they fell. The shot that took effect on his person was in the nostril, and produced instant death. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN is represented as a sober, quiet and inoffensive man, and that he married this woman in a house of ill-fame in New-York, and this was the second time she had left him. She was a resident last Fall of the same house where the tragedy occurred. About $175 were found on his person in gold, and a valuable gold watch. Coroner FRANKLIN called a jury of inquest, and the following verdict was returned:

"We, the jury, find from the evidence that the deceased

FROM KANSAS.

Nebraska and Kansas—Two New States—The New Constitution—The Prospect.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LAWRENCE, KANSAS, Sunday, Aug. 14, 1859.

The refusal of the Constitutional Convention at Wyandotte to comply with the memorial of certain citizens of South Nebraska to extend our northern boundary to the Platte River gives general satisfaction to our people, and has been productive of good results in our neighboring Territory; for the citizens of Nebraska, despairing of success in securing annexation to Kansas, and determined to rid themselves of the arrogance, expense and delay occasioned by the Federal appointees to office there, have set on foot an active movement for the organization of a State government, and intend to apply for admission into the Union at the next session of Congress.

The members of the House of Representatives can congratulate themselves upon having an opportunity during next Winter, to add two more stars to the American constellation, Nebraska and Kansas. The House will doubtless pass favorably upon the application of the people of the two Territories for admission into the great Confederacy of sovereign States, but it is expected in several quarters that the Senate and President of these United States will oppose and defeat the measure of admission, and compel us to the humiliation of remaining in a territorial form of existence.

The Democratic Party of this Territory expect its defeat in the Senate, and are hard at work to render its failure certain. They will do what they can to induce the people of Kansas to reject the new Constitution, and relieve the party in power at Washington from any responsibility in keeping us out of the Union.

It is said that the Governor of the Territory of Nebraska has determined to call a special session of the Legislature, to provide for calling a convention to frame a Constitution for the future State of Nebraska, to be done as speedily as possible, so that their organic law can be ratified by a popular vote, and sent to Washington by the commencement of the next session of Congress.

The present indications are that a very large vote will be polled in this Territory against the adoption of the new Constitution. The Democrats make a dead stand against it; while it is objectionable to many who consider themselves Republicans, because it is not blurred or disgraced by a clause providing for the exclusion of all colored persons from the future State; an iniquitous proposition, but still it is favored by many of our people, who desire a "Free white State."

The Anti-Slavery men, those who have struggled here for five years in behalf of Freedom and have some appreciation of the true spirit of liberty, are opposed to the Wyandotte Constitution, because it is exclusive in its provision for the exercise of the elective franchise, confining it to white male citizens of twenty-one years of age, withholding the right of suffrage from all who are not strictly and legally white, excluding from the ballot-box the intelligent American, while any and every ignorant, bestial or drunken ruffian who has the one quality of white blood, though his very soul is blackened with moral pollution, filth and crime, has free access to it, is infamous and abhorent to every impulse of justice and manhood. These men, and they are numerous in Kansas, are very much chagrined that the Convention, composed of a large majority of Republicans, should have conceded and yielded so much to the dark spirit of Slavery, as to make so mean and cowardly a concession as to deny any but white men the right to vote at our elections.

The word white was incorporated into our organic law for the purpose of securing the support and votes of a certain class of our inhabitants, who through ignorance of the essential elements of freedom and humanity cherish the most absurd and villainous prejudices as principles. But these same men are not yet satisfied; the word white is not enough; they strenuously insist upon incorporating into the Constitution a wicked and iniquitous provision, providing for the exclusion of all people of color from the State. Oregon has done it, say they, and Kansas shall, or we will go for a Slave State. "If niggers are to remain here, they must be slaves." Consequently, these black law men will vote against the ratification of the Wyandotte document.

Other men will vote against it for the reason that the boundary as established is not perfectly satisfactory to them. They desire the annexation of Southern Nebraska, and the Pike's Peak regions of imagined gold fields, to the State.

However, the opposition to the new Constitution has not yet assumed sufficient magnitude to occasion serious alarm that it will be defeated before the people, who hate a territorial form of government, and in their anxiety to free themselves from it, are disposed, if not determined, to support any measure that will secure that one great object.

The renomination of Mr. M. J. PARROTT for Congress, gives general satisfaction to all but the Democrats, who well know that he is the strongest man in the Republican Party, to run for the position; they are very much puzzled to know who their strongest man is, to make the race with him. Their candidates are somewhat mixed up and identified with the troubles here in times past; have an infamous record to go before the people with, and hence their anxiety to ascertain their best man. Mr. DENMAN, Mayor of Leavenworth City, seems to have the inside track for the Democratic nomination; he is a good business man, and Catholic—great on lager bier—and but little against him, to what there is against the other candidates; he has no record that is particularly objectionable.

Conflicting accounts continue to reach us in reference to the richness of the gold mines of Western Kansas; disappointed gold adventurers are arriving almost daily, reporting it a monstrous humbug, while letters are received from persons now in the mountains, giving every encouragement for others to go out and try their luck in the new El Dorado of the West.

All agree gold exists there, and that it is found scattered over that section of country; the only point of disagreement is, that it is not found in sufficient quantities to pay for the extremely hard labor required to get it. Six Missourians came in a few days since; they report having prospected in the mountains for nearly a month, but found nothing to pay, and so they gave it up.

A young man named KING, arrived here on Friday last, in twenty days from Denver City; he intends to return in a few weeks with a circulating library, for the use of the miners during the approaching Winter; he calculates that five thousand people will come out of the mountains late in the Fall, and remain at Denver until Spring opens, with nothing to do but read, gamble and sleep. His reports are rather encouraging; he advises all that contemplate a trip to the mines to defer it until Spring; he considers it too late to go this season.

The wheat crop this season was very large in Kansas. YOUNG, ARAGO.

The Democratic Convention—Judge Johnson Nominated for Congress—Ex-Governor Stanton President of the Convention.

Correspondence of the New York Times.

TOPEKA, (Kansas,) Wednesday, Aug. 17, 1859.

This has been a fine and glorious day as far as the weather was concerned, a gentle breeze from the southwest, a clear sky overhead, and all nature was gay and joyous, except the Democratic chiefs who were anxious for the success of their favorite and the harmony of ye great, glorious Democratic party. They were up early, and congregated together in synods, in private chambers and corners, to lay the wires for controlling the action of the Convention. The candidates were on hand very condescending and gracious, but with an anxious phiz, apprehending defeat and hoping and working for success.

At last the hour having arrived for the Convention to assemble it met, and effected a temporary organization by calling Mr. HEATH to the chair and appointing a Secretary and Committee on Credentials and Permanent Organization, when they adjourned until the afternoon, when they again met, and Committees made a report, when lo! and behold, his Excellency Ex-Gov. WILSON SHANNON, of Lecompton, is made President of ye great Convention. The Vice-Presidents and knights of the quill take position, and ye war commences. First ballot HOLTZCLAW is in advance—he leads in the race—but a majority is against him; another vote is necessary to make a choice; another ballot—ditto. The contest narrows down to DAVIS, the Buchananeer, and JOHNSON, the Douglasite.

The latter is a respectable demagogue, the former a mean, contemptible doughface and lick-spittle, more acceptable to ye party, but not strong before the people. JOHNSON can tell amusing anecdotes and is an eloquent speaker on the stump, which was a powerful consideration with the delegates, and JOHNSON was the successful candidate in the Convention.

The result of the ballot is announced, JOHNSON is called out, he thanks the Convention for the honor conferred upon him, he announces his intention to beat the nominee of ye Republican Party, Mr. PARROTT on the stump, loud cheering from the Democratic dupes, who love to amuse themselves in imaginary success in the approaching canvas and election for Delegates to Congress.

Others address the convention; the Wyandotte constitution is severely denounced, and the delegates conclude to adjourn sine die, which was done, and they all return to their respective homes to make known to the dear people the harmonious result of their deliberations in convention in the Black Republican town of Topeka.

The two candidates before the people—PARROTT and JOHNSON—are both good speakers, and will take the field at an early day, and stump eastern Kansas all over; friends will work for each in the gold mines.

The people are determined upon a rigid enforcement of the registry law, which will secure a fair election, and the return of PARROTT to Congress.

A hard fight will be made upon the ratification of the new constitution. The Democrats are united in their opposition, while the Republicans are divided upon the great question. Some oppose it because the boundaries do not please; some oppose the banking provision; others on account of the word white; and others because it does not contain an infamous black law, providing for the exclusion of all colored persons from the future State of Kansas; some for one thing and some for another, while the entire Democratic Party oppose it because opposition to its ratification is a party measure, and they are subservient to the dictum of party leaders. Court Proceedings—The Sales at Camp Floyd—New Delegates to Congress—Postal Arrangements—Business in the Territory.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Friday, July 29, 1859.

The Third Judicial District Court, Judge SINCLAIR presiding, opened its session in this city the first of this week; but owing to the juries being incomplete, was adjourned until yesterday, when Judge SINCLAIR delivered an able and pointed charge to the Grand Jury; one suited to the times and locality, referring to crimes and their punishment, to events past and present in this Territory. The Jury is composed chiefly of the "brethren," and consequently their approval or condemnation of crimes committed here and by their fellows, will be evinced by their action on the bills that may be laid before them. There is a very large amount of business to come before the Court, and we anticipate a long term. Judge CRADLEBAUGH is about departing for Carson Valley, his district, to open his Court there next month.

The Probate Court in and for this County has been in session for some time past, and last week held criminal jurisdiction in the case of THE Commonwealth vs. DELOSS GIBSON for the murder of JOHNSON in this city, some weeks since. The Court pretended unwillingness to try this case, because its jurisdiction was contested; yet notwithstanding its hesitation it carried out its presumption by hearing said case, when the United States Court, the proper tribunal, was on the eve of sitting. The accused was brought in guilty in the first degree, but sentence has not yet been pronounced. We look to the present sitting of *the United States Court for plain and positive de*cisions or for a full, fair and final exhibition of the futility of the Courts in the Territory. The use of the Court-house, built by appropriations from Congress, although occupied by the Probate Court, has been refused to the United States Court; which has had to accommodate itself with small and inferior apartments in the "Council House" used for the same purpose in the earlier days of the Territory.

The suit of rooms and offices occupied by the Secretary of State, Governor, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, have also been denied them, except under advanced rents. The supposed cause is the ill-feeling engendered through their disagreement with the views held by the heads of the Church, who are the owners of the buildings. Thus animosities are manifested by this people in every way that can inconvenience the Government officials.

The mule sales at Camp Floyd, are still progressing, *and of late to the better interest of the Gov*ernment, as prices had advanced full fifty per cent during the past week. The sales are expected to conclude in two or three days at farthest. Simultaneous sales have been held in this city, disposing of the refuse animals purchased by large dealers at the Camp, and animals have sold here at from $35 to $75 per head. Emigrants are disposing of their cattle and freshly outfitting with mules.

The 24th instant, the great anniversary of this people, passed off very quietly, owing part to its occurring on Sunday, and chiefly, we suppose, to counsel not to render it, as heretofore, of greater import than the 4th of July.

The brethren have rescinded the nomination of Gen. ELDRIDGE as Delegate to Congress, as his long absence from the Territory disqualifies him, and substituted Capt. WM. H. HOOPER, who is doubtless well known to your mercantile community as an old merchant among the Mormons.

The change of postal services ordered by the Department, over this route, from a weekly to a semi-monthly, is a great inconvenience and imposition, especially whilst the Butterfield route is sustained and increased. This is surely the most practical overland trail, as well as capable, all things being equal, of carrying the mails in the shortest time. Business is dull,—more so than was ever known; so say old merchants. Trains of goods are daily arriving, and the market is becoming glutted. A. B.

The "Valley Tan" on Polygamy.

The Valley Tan, July 27, has the following:

"The system of polygamy practiced in this Territory we regard as utterly repulsive to the rights of humanity.

All civilized countries, and, (what has the most bearing in this particular case,) all the States and Territories of the United States, except one,) consider and treat polygamy as a crime, and punishable with penalties more or less severe.

We believe that the Territories of the United States, being the common property of those States, should be ruled by the Federal Government for the benefit of all the States.

We think not only that the Federal Government has the right to suppress polygamy, but we say that, in virtue of the power it has for the protection of society from abuses of civil or religious liberty, it ought to have been long since. While the Constitution of the United States guarantees the rights of conscience in religion, and the pursuit of happiness, it is not supposed that the authorities under the Constitution shall overlook any enormities which may be perpetrated under the name of religion, or any undue interference with the rights of others while in the pursuit of happiness."

The Spingler Institute in a New Home.

About three months since Mr. ARNOUX, the principal of the Spingler Institute, entered into arrangements with Mr. TOWNSEND for the purchase of his famous residence on Fifth-avenue, and the transfer of that building, with all its furniture, has been effected, we understand, for the sum of $200,000. We need not pause to describe it; for the splendor, not to say extravagance, of its architectural decorations, have been a matter of public notoriety and town-talk ever since it was built. The edifice covers six lots, on the summit of Murray-hill.

In addition to the sum paid for the building, many alterations were necessary, and it is in contemplation, we learn, to build a spacious lecture-room on the western side of the house. In the picture gallery, there are some twelve or fourteen paintings, taken by one of the most eminent copyists of the day, from celebrated Italian masterpieces; and in addition to these there are the four originals of the allegorical pictures, entitled "The Voyage of Life," painted by the late THOMAS COLE and distributed by the American Art Union in 1848. As a decided feature in the history of the City's growth, this enormous undertaking deserves to be chronicled, whatever be its actual merits or its eventual issue.

A law-suit of some importance, involving a practice as to the duties of steamboat captains, was tried at Belleville, Orange County, N. Y., on the 26th of July. The issue was between Daniel L. Holley, complainant, and Capt. Anderson, of the steamboat Thomas Powell, defendant. On the 20th day of August, 1858, Mr. Holley stepped upon the gang-plank of the Thomas Powell, as she was lying at Rondout, a few moments before her starting time. The plank fell from the dock, precipitating him into the water. The action was brought to recover damages. The jury, after a short deliberation, gave the plaintiff a verdict of $50.

LETTERS FROM SUMMER LOUNGERS.

Trout-fishing in Canada.

Correspondence of the New-York Times:

HAMILTON, C. W., Monday, Aug. 22, 1859.

THE TIMES was the first paper that I saw on my return from the backwoods into civilization. It contained a column or so of "letters from Summer loungers," on perusing which the cacoethes scribendi seized me, and here behold me at my desk, resolved to tell how I—the type of a not very numerous class—have spent at least a part of the "heated term."

It had been resolved, long ago, by some of "our set," that we would, for at least a week, bid adieu to the hum of cities, the luxury of chairs and tables, the friendly shelter of tinned or shingled roofs, the smiles (or frowns) of our wives, the prattle of our children, the figures in our ledgers, the types of our journals, and try the experiment of how we liked the primitive style of life of the aborigines. In a word, we longed to "camp out in the woods," for a time, à la George DAWSON, or à la Missouri Boone. Numbering six, our party met at Georgetown, a village on the Grand Trunk railway, and there laid in our stores.

We were a sight for polished city. West of England broadcloth was exchanged for the commonest Canadian gray or unbleached Scottish tweed. Pants to match; vests, ditto. Boots, the strongest old pairs we could hunt up. Hats of the rowdy description. Two fishing rods apiece; one long and taper, for *fly*fishing in the open water, the other short and stout for work in the streams among the trees and underbrush. A gun or two. A rifle. A carpet-bag each, with a thorough change of clothing; the clothing in case of a not unusual soaking, the bag itself to serve as a pillow. Two double-seated buggies. A dozen buffalo robes. A blanket or so. Shot and powder. A couple of camp kettles. An axe. Tea, salt, pepper, salt pork and potatoes, ad lib. A tent and a huge lump of ice, rolled up in a horse-cloth. Such was our equipment.

We drove for twenty miles or so, shooting pigeons on the way, to a tavern where we slept, or rather stayed, one night. Early the next morning, that is at 4 o'clock, we again started, and a couple of hours drive through the solitary woods, along the roughest and rudest of paths, brought us to a hunter's cabin, where we took our horses out and transferred our luggage to a couple of scows we had previously sent up. These we poled up a little stream for a mile or two into a lake a mile in breadth, which we crossed and reached our camping ground.

We were on the highest land in Canada West. Within five miles were the swamps whence issue the Maitland River, running to Lake Huron; the Grand River, running to Lake Erie, while the Credit, running to Lake Ontario, was the little stream on whose headwaters we were camped.

Tall pines covered the hills around us, a mine of wealth for future lumber-men. Not a stick of them had been cut, as yet, except by a chance sportsman or Indian hunter. The water was fringed by delicate willows. The air was not tainted by coal smoke, and even at mid-day was cool, for the sun in vain attempted to penetrate the shade of the forest. But enough of this—we could not speculate on the wildness or beauty of the scenery, for our tent had to be pitched, and various other preparations for our sojourn made.

This was soon done. Cedar and hemlock boughs were found to form our carpet. Buffalo robes, spread over these, made a capital couch or bed. A fire was kindled close at hand, and a rack extemporized on which to hang our tea kettle. Then we had to sally forth to catch our breakfast. We resolved to try the lake, and, furnished with lines, rods, and bait, we made our way towards it.

We were not long in adjusting our tackle. It was 7 o'clock when we cast in our hooks. By 9 we had seven dozen trout in our baskets, and turned our faces homewards, that we might eat them.

The salmon is the king of fishes. But what place shall we assign the trout? Handsomest of the finny tribe, what can be more beautiful than a fine trout, just taken from the cool waters of a brook or of a deep clear pool? Smooth, lissome, shining, with a silver belly and a dark-brown back, and nine symmetrical bars, five crimson spots, and a host of pretty speckles upon each side. A strong, muscular fish, too, is your trout, and one weighing a pound will give you more play before you land him than many another fish weighing two or three. A voracious fellow, too, he is, at times, running at and away with your bait, albeit a huge worm, or a frog, or even half another trout, as if he were a shark that had been famished for a month. Yet delicate, withal, for a slight change in the wind, or a cloud coming over the sun, will sometimes stop the fish from biting, all at once, and a basket half filled in half an hour may have to be carried home so late at even. And what other fish equals trout for eating? But you New-Yorkers never get them to perfection. We alone who seek them in their haunts can enjoy that pleasure. Nor can you cook them rightly, in spite of all your culinary skill, for your miss the proper sauces—which are, first, hunger; and second, the bracing air of the wild woods. This is how we cook them: Frying-pan, not too hot, to be greased with a choice bit of salt pork; fish (caught and cleaned within an hour of breakfast) to be dipped in corn-meal and gently laid upon the pan, with a piece of the prime salt pork among them. Fry till they are browned, then turn and repeat the fry. And this is how we eat them: Take the head in one hand, the tail in the other, and the fewer mouthfuls made of bones and all the better. We lived on trout, thus managed, for a week—our only change being a pigeon or so, and we were not tired of the diet when the term had passed. We caught from ten to thirty dozen a day, from an ounce to a pound in weight. So we had no reason to be dissatisfied with our sport.

The last day we had to spare we resolved to fish the stream; so late on Friday we struck our tent and went aboard our scows, and regained the hunter's cabin, where we had left our horses. These we harnessed, and drove a mile or two to where the river was deeper and swifter in its course. Next morning, with our shortest rods, we sallied out. We took to the water at once; sometimes not ankle deep, sometimes wet up to our middle. We scrambled over logs, and crept under trees fallen across the stream, casting every now and then our bait cautiously into the pools under the bank and behind the roots, where the trout were lurking for prey. Five of us went out, and we came home at night with thirty-five dozen fish. These we cleaned and brought home with us, packing around them pieces of the ice which had lasted all that while. But alas, on Monday morning, they were no longer good trout, but stale, and those full are no treat to any.

If any of our readers, Mr. Editor, can tell of a bigger catch than this, I should like to hear of it, that's all. In September we purpose going again to the same spot. I, at least, shall be trout-hungry by the time.

Life at Nahant.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

NAHANT HOUSE, Monday, Aug. 22, 1859.

Be it known to all men by these presents—by presents I of course mean the service of silver plate with which the proprietors of the TIMES will present me when they read this letter—be it known, therefore, by these presents that I—Jack Robinson—am at Nahant.

It is my private opinion—derived from a close study of the classics—that Nahant was formerly a Titan; one of those tremendous fellows who piled Pelion on Ossa, and strove thereby to scale the many-storied Heavenly Mansion known as Olympus. Nahantus—let me call him so—was, like the rest of his brother Titans, discomfitted by the Thunderer, and, being flung by the force of those imperial arms back to his native earth, was smashed on this coast, and turned into stone. One can trace the giant still in those writhing arms of basalt that embrace the sea. The Pulpit Rock was once his massive head, that smiled or frowned defiance at the Pagan god. The stern agonies of his stupendous struggle are even now written in those craggy lineaments that are beaten forever by the avenging ocean.

I never saw a coast before that suggested more thoroughly an eternal despair than this coast of Nahant. The cliffs are not lofty; the surfs are not so grand as some that I have seen; but there is an indefinable expression of loneliness and sorrow in the lineaments of the rocks. Nature here seems to have lost all hope. The coast is furrowed and distorted like a human face torn by some immemorial misery. Black and shattered crags shelve out into the ocean, bearing with the heedlessness of ruin the ceaseless buffets of the waves. It is this lost aspect that has made Nahant more interesting to me than any sea coast I have ever visited. Vaguely it seems to tell some story of immortal woe. When walking through the streets of cities we pass unnoting a thousand happy faces, wreathed in commonplace smiles and ruddy with inexpressive health; but sometimes in our path we behold a countenance, pale and haggard and wild, that causes us to stop and turn and look after it, for it tells us an unspeakable story of passion and struggle and ruin, that interests beyond all the chubby cheeks and white teeth that ever bloomed and glistened. So with Nahant. I have a sympathy with its melancholy shores that all the laughing slopes of French vineyards or English hillsides could not awaken.

Do not, my dear sir, suppose for one instant that I have come down here to be melancholy. No one is melancholy here. We know how to separate the mental from the physical, and, however sorrowful we may be on paper, are very merry at the dinner table. Nothing is more delightful, after a good meal and a bottle of wine, than to wander out on the rocks and dream yourself into a mood of well-fed sorrow. Grief sits very easily on a full stomach. It is only people who have no cause of their own that can really afford to consider the cause of other people. Therefore, as I to-day have played the part of an excellent trencher-man, I felt very much inclined when I commenced this scrawl to indulge in a little plethoric melancholy. "In vain! in vain! strike other chords. Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!" We have not got Samian, allow me to remark, par parenthèse, but we have champagne, which is the same in the Greek. As I remarked, nothing is further from peoples' thoughts than melancholy in these latitudes. There are "hops" three times a week, at which, as at all hop-harvests, the object of the men is to gather the most blooming flowers. Had I the pen of Jenkins, that ubiquitous master of ceremonies at watering places, who delicately, under the cover of transparent initials, compliments "the lovely Miss B——and the ever-blooming and seraphically radiant Mrs. T——," I would instantly proceed, after the fashion of this distinguished author, to the hotel register, and cull you a whole column of alphabetical beauties. But, alas! as you know, my talent does not lie in that way, and I cannot add to the treasures of the modern chronique scandaleuse.

The great object of Betsy Trotwood's life was donkeys. The chief amusement I have at the present moment of my existence is—waiters. The waiter world at this really excellent hotel is intensely interesting to me at meal time. Watching, it gives me some faint idea what would take place on the broad ocean if this country had a war with England, and recalls in some fashion the time and deeds of the old buccaneers. The Nahant waiter is a born privateer. He certainly had letters of marque on his baby linen. Each waiter has a separate family and table to attend, and he consequently looks on all other tables and families as so many prizes, of whose wealth he is at liberty to avail himself, for the benefit of his own circle. He is therefore on a continual predatory cruise, in search of fruits and sauces and tit-bits of every description, which he seizes with the dexterity of a bald-headed eagle, and bears off with him to his own particular nest. There is one venerable pirate who waits on the table next to mine, whom I have named Captain Kyd. He is a buccaneer of renown. As a privateer steers right into a merchantman under false colors, and then when near enough to board hoists the hostile flag, so does "the Captain" sail down on a neighboring table, with such signals of benevolence flaunting in every feature that no one would ever suspect the villainous designs concealed beneath. He has a prize in his eye—say the luscious melon of the dinner. His approaches the unsuspecting guest, who is just about to regale himself—then, whisk! The black flag is hoisted, the juicy prize is seized, and before the astonished diner can collect his senses, Captain Kyd is off under full sail for his pirate's home, leaving the bereft one a wiser and more melon-choly man.

Having been a sufferer myself from the Captain, I hit upon a brilliant idea. I set up a rival pirate, on the principle of set a thief to catch a thief. My waiter is equally reckless and daring, but has the advantage of being younger. It is a splendid sight to see them struggling over some favorite dish! Have you ever seen the osprey dash from its craggy perch down to the surface of the ocean and rise dripping and heavy, with a fish struggling in its talons? and then have you beheld the bald-headed eagle that sat calmly watching the operation, but who, the instant the osprey had secured his prey, darted on him with the speed of lightning and tore it from its claws? If you have seen this, you will be easily able to imagine the struggles of my waiter and the Captain over some delicacy of the season.

We are to have military to-morrow and next day down here. What military they are I cannot positively say, but that they are as military as Boston Common, two drills a year, and rusty muskets can make them I am quite sure. We shall doubtless have the usual proportion of a hundred officers and three privates, patriotic, intoxicated and vocal. I think I shall go and pass those two days in "the swallow's cave."

You are a newspaper man and want news, of course. What shall I do for news to give you? One waiter split another's skull open with a cleaver here the other night. The first is in jail, and the other in bed. You can't say after this that I did not give you an item. We are to have a regatta here this week. It was supposed that no regatta would take place here again this season, but the yachting men have thought better of it, and are about to enliven the harbor once more. A perch was caught the other day off of Castle Rock. It weighed exactly two ounces and a half. It lay on the beach for several days, and was visited by great numbers—of flies. Permit me, in conclusion, to commiserate you for not being down here under the paternal protection of Mr. RAND, and subscribe myself with assurances of my distinguished consideration,

JACK ROBINSON.

Charms of the Country.

Correspondence of the New-York Times:

THE COURSE, Monday, Aug. 22, 1859.

We have been poking about the watering-places long enough. We're tired of city life, so have come to the country. We know we shall be put down for our impertinence, in taking so audacious a step, but we are "on our high horse" now, and the fashion can't stop us. We know it is not the "ton" to go in the country. We know that the "ton," in the Summer season, is to infest big piazzas, to get strangled in small bed-rooms, to go wild with the clash of crockery, and to get—nothing to eat. But we're not on the "ton" just now. We've seen enough of millinery and silk dresses, and enough of very light cassimere pants, vests and coats to match. We've been inspected enough through plain glass eye-glasses for not wearing the same material, and we've been snubbed enough for the same reason. We have discovered that to glory in a clean shirt every morning is not enough for watering-places, and that the clean shirt must be accompanied by the light cassimere clothes. We have seen enough of watering-place society, with its brazen lady landladies. We've seen enough selfishness, pseudo refinement and false gilding. We know well enough that all the young girls go there for rich husbands, and all the young men for rich wives. We also know that both parties get frequently "sold," and that all would be in the same category except for a few manœuvring mammas. It is wonderful—the amount of penetration possessed by these same mammas. The papas are all bored; they want to get home to do business; they don't like this "sort of thing;" but the mamma says, "No, dear, we must get them married off. Don't you see, dear?" And papa goes off and plays whist, to keep from dying of ennui. Yes, we've had enough of all this stuff, and so we've come to the country. One week in it has made us a different man. The looking-glass no longer shows us every morning a thin, cadaverous face, with a pair of dead eyes. To be sure, our face is still thin, but there is a faint, promising flush on the cheek, and the eyes are waking up. "Rome was not built in a day," neither do we expect to fill the caverns in our cheeks in a week, but we know that the work is already commenced. We have got a new sensation—hunger. We actually get hungry occasionally. This would be a lamentable occurrence at a watering-place, but here nature abhors vacuum and has supplied plenty of pleasures to fill it. Eggs, that you can pick yourself, for eggs grow as well as anything else. They are the natural products of barns, cabbage gardens, and all out-of-the-way places. You take a piece of chalk, the shape and size of an egg, put it in an out-of-the-way corner, and not long after you'll have a crop of eggs. Then there are chickens, which are nothing but ripe eggs. Eggs turned by some process of nature into chicken-meat, bones and feathers, and very different they are from the things called "chicken" in the City. The country chicken is no antediluvian, shrivelled-up fossil of a spread eagle,—it is a plump, juicy institution, that makes your mouth water to look at it. Then there's milk—not the mineral—no limestone production, but an animal liquid, daily supplied by an amiable old creature called a "cow." But then such butter! It always used to bother us, where butter came from. Our idea was that it must have come from a salt mine, mixed up in some inscrutable way with tubs. But it appears that butter is made by women. We happened one day to be out in a place called the "wood-house," when a very singular occurrence took place. A woman who was there put on an apron, and then proceeded towards a singular-looking institution with a stick in it. Taking hold of this stick, she began working it up and down as though her very life depended on the operation. "What in the name of wonder are you doing there?" said we. "Making butter, you fool." Being in pursuit of knowledge, we disregarded the superfluous appellation, and mildly asked her the rationale of the process, when, to our astonishment, she wheeled upon us and delivered herself of the following remarkable sentiment: "Naow, look a here, Mister; I don't want none of yaour gas. You've been a follering me araound and araound ever since yaou've been here, and I wont stand it not no longer. Naow go." We went, but we know one thing—Butter is made by women in some way or other.

One of our greatest delights here is to get in an old barn, and then get up on top of a pile of hay. Why we like it, we can't for the life of us tell; but we can sit on top of a lot of hay for hours without feeling the least ennui. We seem to have a particular predilection for hay, for we are very fond of going out into the fields to see the men mow. We came near getting scythed down though, the other day, having got on the wrong side of the instrument, and this circumstance has somewhat modified our enthusiasm. In fact of late we content ourselves with sitting on a fence and watching the scythers at a respectable distance.

Then the jolly old drives we have. We wonder who invented old wagons, with wooden springs and a buffalo-robe on the seat. None of your sleepy barouches for us. Give us, say we, a good easy jolt on the buffalo robes. It stirs one up amazingly, and you see ten times more of the country than out of a barouche—and then, if you've got a pretty girl next to you, how you can make love! Love! Oh, love! there's another sensation we've got since we've been here. We thought we'd outlived "love" and all that sort of thing. We thought we'd got callous, and that our heart was withered, &c., but it appears we were only bottled up. The formal drawing-room young ladies never had any effect on us. But here we come to the country, and to our astonishment we experience extraordinary sensations. We see a young girl with sun-burnt face in a sun-bonnet, and we accost her with the same indifference that we have always felt towards the petticoat tribe. Do we? No, we don't. We don't feel quite so easy as usual. We see a pair of confiding eyes, and a little innocent mouth, and we don't know how it happens, but we're "not ourself at all." We feel "quenched," as it were, and very much agitated. The blood, that before was stagnant in our veins, seems to wake up and run about as like wild-fire. In short, it actually circulates, which is more than could be said of it for many a year, and all this brought about by a sun-bonnet and a sun-burnt face. No, it was the mouth and eyes that did it, and the warm little face. Thank you, my dear, for the sensation—you've made us feel like old times. But this will never do. A fresh nature like yours should never be mated with a blasé man, and we wouldn't impose on you, my dear, even though we see you might easily be imposed on. Oh, its all very well to talk of indications in us that have lately appeared, but they're only disturbings, my dear, and town life will soon put them all out. To-morrow we'll get out Bacon and read philosophy. Yes, we'll not go near this young siren. But, then, what happens to-morrow? Why, to-morrow we don't eat as much breakfast as usual and our cigar is very flat. We think we'll take a little stroll and, perhaps, we'll feel more like going at Bacon. We take the little stroll, but how very extraordinary that we should see our little siren. What an extraordinary circumstance!—that she should be at home the very time she's always at home. Very singular to be sure. Hah! who's going to be tied to a woman? Who? Yes, who? Well, whoever is, why shouldn't he be? If being tied to a woman promotes happiness, why shouldn't a man get tied? Not to get tied to a woman is independence, but independence is only an idea. Why, then, be a slave to an idea rather than to a woman? What's an idea? An idea!—we're not the slightest idea. But a woman!—a soft, gentle creature, who looks at you out of a pair of eyes that remind you of wells, whose very heart seems at the bottom of them, and who causes you extraordinary sensations. Isn't it better to be tied to such a tangible institution than to a mere intangible thing called an idea, a cold, abstract sort of concern. But then suppose the don't keep looking at you as she does now. Suppose the don't continue to cause emotions. Suppose she's only a temporary stir-up. Horrible thought! We are distracted by conflicting emotions. Ah, here's Shakespeare, he'll decide it. Well, what say you? "Woman, thy name is frailty." Hem—to-morrow we go to Saratoga. ENOUGH Z.

PERSONAL.

The Newburgh (N. Y.) News has the following:—"Some days ago we noticed the finding of a dead body in Murderer's Creek. It has been identified as that of JOHN OGLE, who had for some time past resided in Newburgh. Mr. OGLE was of Scotch birth, but for some 20 years resided in the Island of Jamaica. Hoping to better his condition he brought his family to this country and came to Newburgh. Some friends to whom he brought letters procured employment in the cotton factory for one or two of the children, and occasionally an odd job for himself. But he found little to do, and suffered much depression of spirits from the destitution of his large family. A person in New-Windsor took one of the children, and procured a place near him for another. OGLE had been sick this Summer, and on getting better went down to New-Windsor to see his children. He left them on Tuesday morning, and nothing more was heard of him until his body was found in the creek on the following Sunday. His wife had grown uneasy at his absence, and sent down one of the boys to inquire about him. The lad lost his way, and stopping at a house by the wayside to inquire his road, the family became interested in him, drew from him the story of his life—and the end was they showed him the drowned man's clothes, which had been left at the house for identification, and the boy at once recognized them as those of his father."

In St. Louis, a few days since, a young man named North attempted to rescue his sister from a life of infamy, and for that purpose entered a charge of vagrancy against her. She was discovered in a brothel on Market-street, and was brought before the Police Court to answer the charge. The evidence, however, failing to sustain the charge, the magistrate refused compliance with the brother's request that she might be committed to the workhouse, and the girl returned to the house, sweeping out of the Court, say the papers, with a queenly air and a look of mingled triumph and defiance.

The Philadelphia Bulletin states that the woman De Marbais, the victim of her paramour's jealousy in Cincinnati, whose death was reported a day or two ago, came to Philadelphia from Lewistown, Penn., several years since. She first assumed the name of Annie Dunbar, and subsequently that of Blanche Franklin. She kept a house in Lombard-street. Under the name of Franklin she married De Marbais, who then went by one of his numerous aliases. The husband was a common swindler. The relatives of Mrs. De Marbais are said to still reside at Lewistown.

The Chicago papers tell a sad story of the perverseness of a young girl of seventeen, who left her home in Wisconsin not long since and went to Chi*cago, where she was finally discovered in a house of* ill-fame. Her father is an Englishman, and employed a Chicago detective to discover her whereabouts. On Thursday she was found, says the Press, sick and almost deserted, in the most forlorn circumstances. The father was to arrive on the following evening to take her home again.

The Rev. R. F. Parshall, formerly pastor of the Baptist Churches of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, was tried by the Church of Sandy Hill on the 23d August for sundry acts of misconduct, and found guilty. He was accordingly turned out of the Church, and deprived of his license as a preacher. He had been suspected for over three years past of improper conduct.

A gentleman in Lockport, N. Y., has ordered a model steamboat to be built for him at Buffalo. He intends to make a trip with it to Texas, where his friends reside. The boat is about forty feet long, seven feet beam, and eleven feet over all. The engine is to be of eight-horse power. The boat, when finished, will cost about $800.

A singular freak of an insane girl, fifteen years of age, is noticed by the Chicago Press. During Thursday night, she took an infant sister from the bed where it was sleeping, and fled with it. Some hours afterwards, she was found in a corn-field in the West Division, holding the child to her bosom. It had not been injured.

Gen. Tom Thumb has set up his yacht, named, after himself, the Charles S. Stratton. The little gentleman made his first cruise on Friday, from Bridgeport to the Black Rock Light-house. The Stratton seems to have proved herself a crack sailer.

Phelan was in Cleveland on Saturday, and played a game of billiards with Bird. Phelan began and led off with a run of 50 points, which was the highest made during the play. The first hundred points were played in about eight minutes.

A writer in the Mobile Mercury, who prides himself on his intimate fellowship with John Mitchel, reviews his course in a column article, and describes Mitchel as "a disappointed, unhappy and restless man."

McHenry alias Townsend, whose case excited a sensation in Canada a year ago, is now occupying the humble position of cook on a schooner running between Buffalo and Cleveland.

The Hon. E. D. Culver and the Hon. Anson Burlingame will address the people at Vergennes, on the second day of the Fair of the Champlain Valley Agricultural Society, Friday, Sept. 9, 1859.

The Boston Transcript says: "The portrait of Mr. Choate, by Ames, has found a purchaser at the price named, ($500,) and a duplicate has been ordered for another gentleman.

Ex-Governors Seymour and Hunt have been appointed lay delegates to represent the Episcopal Diocese of Western New-York at the General Convention to be held at Richmond in October.

The Rev. R. S. Crampton has been appointed as District Secretary for Central New-York by the American and Foreign Christian Union.

Two Michigan quoit-players, Patterson, of Wood stock, and Goodall, of Detroit, are to play a match game for the championship and $500.

The Right Rev. Dr. Payne, Episcopal Missionary Bishop to Africa, preached in Buffalo on Sunday in behalf of his mission.

THE SANTA FE MAIL.—We learn from undoubted authority that the Postmaster General has ordered an increase of speed in the letter and paper service from Independence to Santa Fe. Instead of twenty days, the mail is hereafter to be carried in fifteen days—allowing the contractors fifty days in which to take through the book and document bags—a mode of overloading the mails all over the country which had better be dispensed with. If this matter must be sent, let it go upon some slow steamboat or coach, at some trifling rate of freight. We learn that an increased compensation for this increased service has been allowed, equal to about $15,000 per annum. This service will be of great value to our business men, and it is due to the people of New-Mexico that they should be placed in more rapid communication with the States. The increased expedition on this route will have the effect of keeping the passenger travel on the old line, instead of going to El Paso, and there taking the Overland route, as has been fr

LAW REPORTS.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term.

Before Judge Ingraham.

John A. Underwood and Henry A. Underwood vs. The New-Yorkers Mutual Insurance Company.—The defendants in this suit filed their answer, and the plaintiffs moved that a separation of the answer and counter claim should be made, and that the Court should direct the defendants to elect which they would try first. The Court had so ordered, and the defendants had made their election, and the plaintiffs had now made it was proper that the Court should also direct the defendants to elect which they would try first, and that the Court should so order.

Mr. Hymes would resist the Court the necessity of giving him, by the affidavit of such a man as Vanderbilt, the Court would interfere to deprive the plaintiffs of their separation. Mr. Noyes said that Vanderbilt was a witness, and proved that Vanderbilt was an opinion as to the sentiments, certificates, and other papers, which he had given, he should have to examine Vanderbilt, and he was contradicted by the defendant's affidavit, and he was not but make crossexamine, could have his examination.

Counsel asked if, in the affidavit of such a man as Vanderbilt, the Court would interfere to deprive the plaintiffs of their separation. Counsel asked if the Court was a juror, his Honor would not believe Vanderbilt's affidavit, and he was a controverted witness.

As to Holbrook, he had changed his examination. He was once engaged by the Company to make a separation of the claim. He had sold himself to the plaintiffs to make a different statement. Counsel would not any imputation on the conduct of Holbrook, but he thought his course had fairly subjected him to the censure of the Court. Counsel commented at some length upon the affidavit of Holbrook, as he had twelve separations of the stock in which the first stock was different from that of the other. This was the first time he had contradicted, and he was now had declared a dividend which they proposed to pay to such only as good faith, as they supposed to be entitled to it. That was all the Court could do, and it was all that could reasonably be asked of them.

Counsel claimed that if the Company were not preventing good faith, an injunction would issue, but not unless the Company were proceeding in bad faith. In the case the Court of Chancery could interpose, before the contest had been decided, some would have to be made out against the Company. Whether there was the Court could not interfere was, that the Company was a foreign corporation. This Court had power to force a separation of domestic and foreign corporations, and perhaps would it so act as injunction against it? A majority of the Board of Directors resided in Connecticut, and it was contended that he did not claim that the Company was a domestic corporation.

Mr. Hymes then contended that this case had been substantially decided in the case of Carpenter and Vermilyé, where it had been decided that such a separation could be made. Many points in the case had been decided in the case of Blackford vs. The Company.

But another difficulty arose in the way of an injunction. The Company were liable in Connecticut, under that statute, to pay the very dividend, by suit, which this Court was asked to enjoin them not pay; and should they be then sued they could not plead this injunction in bar,—for they could not plead even without this in bar.

In continuing, Mr. Noyes again stated that the embarrassment which must follow that injunction was a sufficient reason for the refusal by the Court; and he did not believe it was the office of a great Judge of this State to simplify his jurisdiction in this case, and make a course which make, in a short time, our courts the resort of all the railroads of the country. All these suits were intended or have very large interests in the Company, and counsel did not believe the Court would permit itself to be so embarrassed in the hands of them or similar plaintiffs to harass and vex the Company.

Mr. Biles then replied for the plaintiff, claiming that it had been admitted by counsel for defense that these over-issues began before October, 1857, and that was a full admission to the defendants on this motion. This explained why the Company had ever resisted the very full inspection of their books.

The argument of Mr. Biles in reply to Mr. Noyes was fully much of a reiteration of his argument on Tuesday. He considered by again asking the Court to continue the injunction, and to make an order that an examination of the book be had under the direction of the Court, that, if practicable, a just separation may be made. The Court took the papers, and reserved decision.

In addition to the affidavits, of which an abstract was given in yesterday's Times, there is one made by Justice R. Bulkley, Esq., President of the Company, to the effect that there are 1,100 holders of genuine stock—that even if it were true, as alleged, that there was any doubt as to the correctness of the list of stock made up by order of the Directors, the dividends on such stock could not amount to more than $600, on which the plaintiff's interest would be $1 63.

AN ARMS UNCLEARED—WHAT'S IN A NAME?

In the Matter of Elizabeth Tebow, alias Bullen, &c., &c., Alleged to be an Habitual Drunkard.—Robert Webber, the son of Mrs. Tebow, alias Tiebow, alias Tenbow, alias Teobow, alias Boulen, alias Lindsley, alias Webber, who has gone by all these names, and still perhaps that of Alston besides, but whose real name we venture to suggest, is Tiebout. Robert Webber, then, alias Robert Lindsley, alias Lindsay, petitioned this Court on 11th of June last for a commission de lunatico inquirendo, alleging that his mother habitually was an habitual drunkard, and incapable of managing her affairs. He alleges that she has been all the names given above, but as we are forced to use one name, we shall hereafter call her Mrs. Tiebout.

The petitioner alleges that Mrs. T. has been a drunkard for nine years past, and is now, although 74 years old, if not 77, constantly and furiously drunk and noisy; that she has a violent temper, and that no one can live long in her house together.

The petition was supported by affidavits of the agent of the house where Mrs. Tiebout lived when in New-York, the landlord of No. 376 Tenth-street, where she lived, of the wife, and Drs. Covel and Ritterin, of the Tombs, who all concur in their accounts of her great drunkenness and their cruelty contract. Drs. Covel and Ritterin testify that she is very old, calling herself 77 or 78, and of advanced age, reduced by her continued effects of liquor and ill-usage—that it appeared to go at large she will be the subject of violence of the mob, with which she had a difficulty at Justice Bosman and others testified that Mrs. Tiebout was arrested for drunkenness four times, and committed for ten days, and that she was greatly to blame. Henry Nicoll, a lawyer, and said they were not to be lunatics, who continued a jury of 12 persons, and presented to John Gilmore, the Commissioner of Lunacy, mentioned. Mrs. Burrows, who had lived in the house with Mrs. Tiebout, testified that her father by to take his mother; that soon after the latter came, she asked for a gill of wine, and went to bed totally drunk; that she was very abusive, and called her "Murder;" that Mrs. Burrows was finally obliged to send for a policeman and have her taken away. Several other witnesses testified to the same effect. Mr. Conner, the accountant of the Bleecker-street Savings Bank, testified that Mrs. Tiebout kept an account in that Bank under the name of Bullen, and had kept such an account since 1822, having now a balance of $2,771 64. Her last deposit was one of $2,000, in 1857. She has taken out $50 every few months. She was allowed 4 per cent interest on the money. She had not drawn anything for three years.

On this evidence the jury found, on July 14, that Mrs. Tiebout of Tebow, or Bullen, &c., was an habitual drunkard, and incapable of managing her property, and that the last year's children, Robert Webber and Elizabeth Alston, (half-sister to the former,) but the whereabouts of the latter was unknown. The verdict was signed by only thirteen jurors.

The petitioner now moved the Court to confirm the verdict and report of the Commissioner. Mrs. Tiebout filed a counter affidavit, of which the substance is as follows:

[illegible] affidavit states that she is the daughter of Jacob Lindsley, deceased, and was born in Morristown, Morris County, N. J., on October 9, 1782; that she married Henry Lindsley in life to Rodney Boulen, of Morris County, N. J., some years after; that she there had issue by said Lindsley, George, who married her, and Elizabeth, who married Mr. Boulen, who married her, and Robert, who married Mr. Boulen, who married her, and Mr. Boulen died, and she married Mr. Tiebout, who married her, and Mr. Tiebout died, and she married Mr. Webber, who married her, and Mr. Webber died, and she married Mr. Alston, who married her, and Mr. Alston died, and she married Mr. Tiebout, who married her, and Mr. Tiebout died, and she married Mr. Webber, who married her, and Mr. Webber

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

A Marriage and its Results.—Cecilia [illegible], a German woman about 40 years of age, [illegible] the Hebrew faith, appeared before Justice Bosman yesterday, and preferred charges of assault and battery and larceny against King Zoumberg, also a German and a Jew, Louis and Abraham Sonneborn, father and a man named Sternberg. The woman stated that she was married, on a short acquaintance, to Henry the elder Sonneborn, upon the representations of one Abe Cohn and his wife, who stated that the old man was wealthy, and consequently was to support her. Accordingly, on the 10th inst., Justice Osborn married them in the Police Court. Mrs. Sonneborn soon found out that her husband was not worth any property, and had married her to become possessed of cash, which she had saved by her frugality from the profits of a small fancy goods business, in which she had been engaged for some years at No. 150 Houston-street. Under these circumstances she refused to cohabit or have anything to do with her husband, particularly as they had not been married in accordance with Hebrew rites and ceremonies. Sonneborn thereupon threatened at the course pursued by the complainant, and on Monday night last he with his sons, Louis and Abraham, forcibly entered her house, beat her, and took away about $300 of her money. She screamed for assistance and a policeman came, but he was told by the three men that the woman was a disorderly character, and they asked him to arrest her as such. This the officer did, and the poor woman was locked up in the Clinton-house all night. The next day, when she was still detained by Morty, the men Sonneborn, accompanied by Sternberg's sons and others, went to her store, which they entered by having the lock picked, and took away silks, hosiery and haberdashery, besides wearing apparel, furniture and other articles, at least worth $450, belonging to the complainant. The poor woman told the Judge she was willing to let the matter end and pocket her losses, preferred Sonneborn would pocket her no more. The magistrate, however, advised a different course, and though it is doubtful whether the money can be held on the charge of larceny, he is committed for assaulting his wife, while the two sons and Sternberg are held—the former for assault and battery and larceny, the latter for larceny alone.

Suicide by Taking Laudanum.—An inquest was held yesterday, at the Twelfth Ward Station-house, by Coroner Gamble, upon the body of a German named Russ, a tailor by occupation, who destroyed his life by taking laudanum. The evidence adduced showed that the deceased was found lying under a rock, in a dying condition, in the vicinity of Mount Morris. He just had strength enough to say to those who discovered him that he wished to be left alone to die, and hoped they would not disturb him. He expired a few minutes afterwards. A post-mortem examination by Dr. Beach revealed the fact that death had ensued from the effects of a large dose of laudanum, and a half-pint bottle which had contained that drug was found in his pocket. The Jury rendered a verdict accordingly. His body was removed to Bellevue Hospital, where the friends have an opportunity of claiming it. Deceased appeared to be about twenty-five years of age. He was five feet eight inches in height, had brown curling hair and gray eyes. He wore a checked shirt, brownish vest, brown woolen coat and dark mixed pants. The foreboding of his left hand was missing.

Health Commissioners.—Dr. Guild, yesterday, at the meeting of the Health Commissioners, reported the arrival of the bark Florida, from Aspinwall and Chagres. She had lost one man from bilious remittent fever while at the latter port. It was reported that she be detained five days. He also reported the arrival of the bark George Albert, from Port-au-Prince; the Sea Campbell, from Sierra Leone; the Dunbar, from Chenangue; the schooner Pontiac and the bark Rostever, from Remedios; the brig Venus, from Laguna; the brig Grenada, from Cardenas; the bark Clarissa, from Trinidad; the schooner R. W. Demill, from Matanzas. The passengers and crews of all these vessels were well, and the ports from which they came healthy. It was directed that the Sea Campbell be detained nine days, and the rest a few days for observation. The Board adjourned to Friday.

Keep an Eye on the Monkey.—The latest plan for the robbery of private dwellings is reported by the Newark Mercury of yesterday. As the individual may visit this City we deem it proper to give the particulars. The Mercury says there is a suspicious looking individual, a "barrister," going around down carrying a string, to the end of which is attached a gaty, thieving little monkey. Whenever this individual spies a bedroom or parlor window open, he stops and listens, and if he is satisfied that there is no one present in the room, he sends Mr. Monkey creeping slyly up the front of the house into the open window. Now the man-monkey on the sidewalk, having hold of the other end of the string is strongly suspected of having communicated his own thievish propensities to the little monkey, and has "educated" him to fasten on little valuables, such as bracelets, breastpins, finger-rings or loose change, which his monkey-ship may find lying on the bureau or elsewhere.

Explosion of a Sugar-house Boiler.—The steam boiler in the sugar-house of Schoemaker & Co., corner of Cherry and Pike streets, exploded on Tuesday afternoon with tremendous violence, forcing up the sidewalk under which it was placed. The building was seriously damaged by the concussion, and an employe of the establishment, named Wm. Reardon, was severely scalded. He was conveyed to his residence, No. 317 Cherry-street, where he was attended by a physician, who reports that he is in a very dangerous condition. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

An Addition to the Rogue's Gallery.—By way of completing, or rather enhancing the interest that already attaches to the Rogues Gallery, at the Police Head-quarters, daguerreotypes of Deputy-Superintendent Carpenter, Capt. Walling and some twenty-five others who are often named in connection with the most noted criminals of this City, have been taken" and hung up in the room of Superintendent Pelsmont. It is hinted that the Superintendent intends to keep an eye upon these gentlemen in future, for he has learned that they are frequently seen in "suspicious company."

Fatal Vehicle Accident.—An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner Gamble, at the Eleventh Ward Station-house, on the body of Herman Huss, who was instantly killed on Tuesday evening by being run over by a truck on the corner of Avenue C and Seventh-street. Deceased was sitting on the pole of the truck at the time, and was shaken off by a jolt of the vehicle. He was a native of Germany, and 40 years of age.

Vessel Ashore at Rockaway.—A vessel was yesterday reported to be ashore near Hogg Island, on Rockaway Beach. The weather being thick in the morning, it could not be ascertained whether she was a ship or bark. She had evidently gone on during the S. E. gale of Monday night, and, as it was still blowing fresh from the southeast, there was a heavy sea on, and the vessel was in danger of going to pieces.

A Crazy Man in the Street.—Officer Bulten, of the Eighteenth Ward, observed a man on Tuesday evening wandering about the streets, whose actions showed that he was crazy. The lunatic was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he gave his name as William Brady, and said he lived in Trumbull County, Ohio. He had $63 33 in a pocket-book in his possession.

The New Counterfeit Bills.—The counterfeit bills purporting to be $10s on the Narragansett Bank of Wickford, R. I., which were circulated so freely on Tuesday night, prove to be altered from the bills of a broken bank—the Farmers' Bank of Wickford, R. I. A number of complaints were made at Police Head-quarters yesterday from parties who had been victimized.

For Europe.—The British screw steamship Glasgow, Capt. Thompson, left this port yesterday for Glasgow, with 24 cabin passengers, and 92 in the steerage. The Hamburg Mail steamer Hammonia, Capt. Schwenzer, left yesterday afternoon for Hamburg, with 78 passengers.

Carroll Park.—The property owners in the vicinity of Carroll Park have made arrangements to have a band of music every Saturday night in this park, during the balance of the warm season, commencing Saturday night next.

A New Business.—One man at least has been doing a profitable business for several days, by carrying the Ridgewood water to New-York and selling it. Several other persons are making arrangements to engage in the same lucrative business.

Board of Health.—There was a meeting of the Board of Health yesterday morning, but no business of importance was transacted.

Police Reports.

An Adventurous Liquor Dealer.—Joshua Collins, who keeps liquor-saloon at No. 118 Reade-street, appeared before Justice Quackenboss at Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, and told a tale of woe which had been heaped upon him by a fair and frail young lady who accosted him in the street and had victimized him by her blandishments. He said that some time during last February, on a rainy evening, he was allured by a woman named Ann Smith to some unknown house in an unknown street where, in an unknown way, he was disposed of of $130 which he had in his pantaloons pocket when he entered the lady's house. His mind was not in the clearest condition at the time, and when he discovered his loss it was beyond his power to identify the place. The young woman's countenance, however, had fixed itself upon his memory, and believing he would recognize her if ever they again met, he has nearly promenaded Broadway every evening since in the hope of finding the woman who had victimized him. On Tuesday night he observed her, and again was induced to wall home with her. This time he was careful to note the number of the house, which he ascertained to be located in Greene-street. Unmindful of his former shabby treatment at the hands of his charmer, he set down to enjoy himself with her and one of her friends, who was called Miss Sarah. He had not been seated long, however, when he missed his pocket-book, containing $475, which he had when he entered the house. He charged the girls with having the money, and after some delay they restored it to Collins, who immediately left the place, informed Officer Wilson, of the Eighth Ward, and had them both arrested. Justice Quackenboss held the women for examination.

Arrest of an Alleged Fugitive Forger.—Henry Karples, a fugitive from justice, was brought before Justice Osborn, Tombs, Canada, by Officer Bowyer, on a charge of forgery. The prisoner was formerly employed as cutter's clerk in the flour establishment of Hecker & Brothers in Cherry street. It is alleged that Karples, in connection with a man named Henry Jamswitt, succeeded in defrauding Hecker & Brothers out of some six or seven thousand dollars worth of flour. For a year or eighteen months the fraud, it is said, was carried on without detection, so shrewdly did Karples conduct his operations by omitting false marks upon his books. The fear was sent to Jamswitt, who disposed of it generally out of the City. Finally it was made known to Hecker & Brother that several dealers in New-Haven were in the habit of purchasing the Hecker flour at such a low rate as left no doubt of its being stolen. An investigation, they say, resulted in fixing the guilt upon Karples and his confederate Jamswitt, and they were arrested. Their frauds were committed in the years 1856-7. Through negligence on the part of the Police both prisoners escaped from custody and fled to Canada, where they have since remained, eluding all attempts to discover their whereabouts, until Mr. Bowyer undertook to find them. Jamswitt was also arrested in Montreal, and only awaits the signing of the necessary extradition papers, when he will be brought back to the City. Karples was locked up for trial.

Daring Burglary in Fulton-street.—Last evening a most daring and successful robbery was perpetrated in the store of R. S. Kirk, No. 58 Fulton-street. About 10 o'clock an officer of the Second Ward while trying the doors along Fulton-street, found the door of Mr. Kirk's store open; he sent word to the Station-house and Capt. Wood immediately sent word to one of Mr. Kirk's clerks. It was ascertained on entering the store that an attempt had been made to blow open the safe, and failing in that the thieves had commenced ransacking the drawers of the desks, and in one of them came across the safe key with which they opened the safe. About $525 in bills, silver and gold, two gold watches and checks valued in all at about $1,000, were taken. A large portion of the bills were on the Planter's Bank of Georgia. The Second Ward Police think that the robbery was perpetrated by two men who were seen prowling around the premises just before the store was closed, and who, watching a favorable opportunity, secreted themselves behind some boxes.

Grand Larceny.—A lad named John Murray was committed for trial by Justice Bosman, yesterday on a charge of stealing a silver watch and some money, in all valued at $50 71, from Mr. Lewis T. Diedler, of No. 26 Eldridge-street, on Tuesday night. The last named the property from Mr. Diedler's bedroom while he was asleep. Two men named Jonas Alley and Michael Smith went into the clothing establishment of Alpheus D. Kirk, 76 Fulton-street, yesterday afternoon under pretence of purchasing clothing. Both suddenly left the store, however, Smith taking away a black cloth frock coat which he had put on to see how it would fit. The thieves were pursued and arrested within two blocks of the place. Justice Osborn committed them for trial.

Charge of Seduction against a Policeman.—A patrolman of the Sixth Precinct was arrested last evening on a charge of seduction, preferred against him by a girl who has been living as a servant at No. 91 Mott-street. The girl gave birth to a child last week, and she charges the policeman with having seduced her last Winter, and in addition, alleges that he gave her a loathsome disease. The same officer was up before the Police Commissioners last week on a charge of assault, preferred against him by a clerk in one of the City Departments.

Another Rumored Wife-murder.—A telegraph dispatch was received at the Police Head-quarters at a late hour last evening from the Sixteenth Ward Police, stating that a man named James Thompson had been arrested on a charge of having killed his wife at their residence, No. 21 West Twenty-sixth street. The deceased was about 40 years of age, and has lived unhappily with her husband for some time, and it is alleged she was badly beaten by her husband last night, and died in consequence of the injuries received.

Suspected Thieves.—Two Brooklyn men, named Joseph Leshet and Ernest Coley, who live in Hamilton-avenue, were taken before Justice Osborn yesterday, by Officer McLean, on suspicion of having stolen $20 worth of property from Leopold Vomacilenbrink, of No. 504 Greenwich-street, which was found in their possession. The prisoners could not satisfactorily account for having the property, and so were locked up for examination.

Felonious Assault.—Daniel Donovan, a canal boatman, was arrested on Tuesday evening, charged by George Barnes, of No. 89 Washington-street, with drawing a knife on him, and assaulting him without provocation with a slung shot, inflicting severe injuries. Justice Osborn committed Donovan for trial.

EXCURSIONS.

St. Mary's Parochial Schools.—The congregation of St. Mary's Parish, in this City, encouraged by the extraordinary success of their excursion to Jones' Wood some two months ago, determined to have a repetition of the festival,—the object in both cases being the accumulation of an amount of funds sufficient to guarantee the pastor, the Very Rev. Archdeacon McCabbon, in commencing the erection of the projected Parish Schools on a scale commensurate with the wants of the locality entrusted to his religious charge. The second excursion was fixed for yesterday, and, but for a relentless caveat interposed by the rain, would probably have surpassed the previous one in numbers, jollity and profit. As it was, the crowd was large, and, as if to put the weather at defiance, as merry as need be. There were bands and fiddlers by the dozen, each the centre of a group of enthusiastic dancers. Mr. Ferguson, the Irish piper, performed wonderful feats of melody, and sang the droliest of songs. A band of Negro minstrels afforded delight to a vehemently-applauding audience, and, in the intervals of enjoyment, the gentlemen who presided over the distribution of lager-bier and soda water were subjected to most laborious exertion. The fête was undisturbed. No personal differences, ill-will, or rowdyism ventured to show themselves.

For Flushing, College Point and St. Ronan's Well, which affords a delightful view of the islands and bays of the East River, Hurigate, &c., excursion parties in large or small numbers may take the steamer Enoch Dean, from Fulton Market slip, upon any one of her three daily trips, tickets to go and return being sold at a discount from the regular fare. To those who prefer to combine a sail with a ride upon a railroad, through a delightful district of country, the steamer Mattano will take you from Fulton Market slip, at any one of her five daily trips, landing at Hunter's Point, where passengers are received on board of the cars, and set you down in Flushing in forty-five minutes from the City. The same boat will afford the stranger a view of the villas upon the East River, Ravenswood and Astoria, returning in about two hours from the time of leaving the City.

Family Excursions on the Hudson.—Among the attractions for pleasure seekers to morrow is a musical excursion up the Hudson River, which has been projected by Mr. Alfred Pick, upon the plan of his former "floating soirees." A large steamer and commodious barges will be provided, and there will be vocal as well as orchestral music. The party, which it is intended shall be of a select description, will leave the Cities of New-York and Brooklyn at an early hour in the afternoon, and after a sail up the Hudson, return at a seasonable hour in the evening. Entertainments of a refined and pleasing character are promised to the guests.

Sporting Men Gone up the River.—A party known as the "Excelsior Club," composed of the principal sporting men upon Broadway, with their ladies, yesterday started upon an excursion "up the river," on board of the steamboat Rip Van Winkle, under command of Capt. Brown. There were some thirty couples, the price of tickets for each party being $15. Those who saw the laying-in of Champagne and other delicacies, state that the assortment was "extensive."

For Shrewsbury and Long Branch, with an opportunity to enjoy a view of the ocean, and a bath, take the steamer Highland Light, from the foot of Robinson-street, the hour of departure from the City being regulated by the tide in Shrewsbury River. The steamer Long Branch, also, runs to the Ocean House, Pleasure Bay, Long Branch, and other places, which, during the warm weather, attract crowds of people who wish to escape from the heat and dust of the City.

Intended Excursions.—The season for pleasure parties upon the water is fast drawing to a close. To such as have not yet enjoyed their holiday, the following are among the inducements still held out in the way of refined enjoyments, on board the various steamers devoted to excursions in our waters.

For New-Haven.—By either a day or night boat, the pleasure-seeker or the man of business may find handsome accommodations on board of the steamers Elm City or Traveler, both of which leave from Peck-slip, East River.

The steamers Sylvan Grove and Sylvan Shore now run every hour throughout the day, from Peck-slip, beginning at 7 A. M., to Harlem, connecting with steamboats for High Bridge. The fare is very low and the sail delightful.

For Fort Hamilton or Coney Island—a ramble on the beach, a bath, or a clam chowder, according to inclination, take the steamer Massachusetts, from any one of the half-dozen stopping places mentioned in her advertisement. The heavy southeast gale of the past two days will cause a fine surf on the beach to-day.

For Hartford, direct, and an early morning sail along the green banks of the Connecticut, embark on board of either the steamer City of Hartford or Greatite State, which leave on alternate days from Peck-slip, at 4 o'clock P. M.

For Greenport, Sag Harbor, and Orient, with a chance for fine fishing, and a glance at the lower part of Long Island, with its gracious bays, and green islands, take passage on the steamer Catalina, on Tuesday, Thursday or Saturday afternoons.

For the Fishing Banks, a delightful sail, a sniff of the sea-breeze, performance a quantum of sea-sickness, a tumble in the surf, and glorious sport in the way of hauling in the blue fish, may be enjoyed by a trip on board the steamers Cover, Hamilton, Erie, or Manhattan.

Report of the Chamber of Commerce.—The annual report of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New-York has been issued. It is a volume of indispensable interest to business men, embracing a large amount of statistical information not elsewhere to be found in print.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

Plank Road.—The work of repairing the Plank Road, on Fulton-avenue, for a distance from the City Hall, on Fulton-ferry, to the Cemetery of the Evergreens, is being pushed forward with all possible dispatch. The contractor, Mr. Lockwood, who has charge of the work, is using every exertion to have the road in good condition for the accommodation of the public, and the City Inspector, Mr. Cornell, and his assistant, Mr. Lockwood, are giving the matter their personal attention. The contractor, for the sake of the public convenience, is laying down the grade of this avenue, at the highest point, is pushing the work forward as fast as possible. The work already has progressed so far as to make a marked difference in the appearance of the avenue. The proposition to fill up the low parts of this thoroughfare near Fifth-avenue meets with a most formidable opposition, composed of men largely interested in the property in the vicinity, who are determined to resist the proposed change at every step and at any cost. It is understood that the Railroad Company will lay the rails and run cars to Flatbush as soon as the work on the avenue has been completed.

The Porcine War.—The raid by the authorities of New York and Brooklyn against the owners of swine violating the ordinances, has brought unexpectedly a large amount of land just outside of the city into requisition. It is estimated that not less than ten thousand hogs are quartered in the farming portions of Kings County, and a large number also are quartered in the adjoining county of Queens. The return of Mayor Powell to his post has caused another panic in Brooklyn among the hog owners, because, contrary to expectation, he declines to grant any permits for hogs to be kept in the city, unless in conformity with the ordinance regulating such matters.

New-York Burglars Arrested.—On Tuesday night, Capt. McClave and Officer Mosell, of the Eighth Precinct, arrested two Frenchmen named Joseph Secret and Ernest Coley, at a house on Hamilton-avenue, near Mill street, on suspicion of being the parties who a few nights ago robbed the house of B. Van Middlesworth, No. 504 Greenwich street, New-York, when $25 50 in gold coin, two revolvers, and other property was stolen. The officers found all of the missing property in the possession of the accused. They were yesterday taken to New-York for trial.

New Liquor Dealers' Association.—A new Liquor Dealers' Association has recently been formed in Brooklyn, with Mr. H. Steinland for President, and Mr. Lozier, of Hamilton-avenue, Secretary. All liquor dealers are invited to become members, under the promise that there shall be no initiation fees or dues to be imposed, to buy up Judges and others. The expenses incurred are to be defrayed by voluntary contributions.

The Washington Grays at New-Bedford.

The following account of the arrival and reception of the Washington Grays, Eighth Regiment, of this City, is from a correspondence of the Boston Atlas, under date of Aug. 23. He says the Washington Grays arrived here this morning. The New-Bedford City Guard were in waiting at an early hour this morning to receive them. They numbered 44 muskets, and made a fine and soldier-like appearance. They were accompanied by the Brigade Band of Boston. The Guard waited patiently until the arrival of their New-York friends, who, owing to detention of the steamer by fog on the Sound, did not arrive until 8½ o'clock. On their arrival the line was formed at the depôt, and the Guard escorted them to Camp Ingraham, on the Commons. Here Capt. Ingraham, of the City Guard, welcomed the Washington Grays to the Camp in an appropriate speech, which was responded to by Capt. Swanzey of the New-York Company, in a cheerful and patriotic manner, who invited the Guard to visit the Empire State. After this they proceeded to the armory of the Guard, where the muskets were stacked, and the New York Company were then escorted to the Parker House to breakfast. At 11 o'clock the two companies formed again and marched to the market-square, and were brought into line, when his Honor Mayor Nye and members of the City Government advanced to meet them. Mayor Nye welcomed the New-York Company in the following speech:

Mr. Commander: On behalf of the City Government and the citizens of New-Bedford, I bid you, and through you the officers and soldiers under your command, with their invited guests, a cordial and fraternal welcome. I assure you, Sir, it is highly gratifying to our citizens that this city should have been selected by the military company under your command for passing a few days in encampment and recreation, affording the opportunity for exchanging friendly salutations, and tendering a generous hospitality to gent men so highly distinguished for military tactics and discipline. With the assurance that our citizens desire to afford every facility that will tend to make the "Grays" stay with them pleasant and agreeable, allow me again to bid you and your associates a cordial and hearty welcome.

Captain Swanzey responded in behalf of his command. He was followed by Adjutant Beauvais, who, in a few remarks thanking the City Government for the manner in which they had been received, paid a high compliment to the Guard for their fine appearance and excellent drill. The companies then marched through several of the principal streets, to the residence of James Arnold, Esq., where invitation was extended to them to visit Mr. Arnold's beautiful gardens. From the gardens they marched to the Parker House to dine, and afterwards to the camp on the Common.

At 5 o'clock both the companies marched to the Common, and were reviewed by his Honor Mayor Nye and the City Government. A large number of spectators were present to witness the review. Thus far everything for the comfort and pleasure of the company have been bestowed upon them by their escort, the City Guard of New-Bedford. To-morrow both companies proceed to the steamer Eagle's Wing, and go on an excursion down the harbor, accompanied by the Mayor and invited guests.

Base Ball.

OAKLAND VS. POWHATAN.

A match was played between these Brooklyn clubs on the 19th inst., resulting in a tie. The play on the part of the Oakland was splendid; Oge, a first base, catching every ball that came near him. The third base was splendidly played by Murphy, who caught some balls that seemed almost an impossibility; his throwing to first base was as well as we have ever seen any senior player do. The Powhatan played very well also, though they did not seem to be as strong as usual, two of their men being absent, but their substitutes, Yellott and Earle, did better than could have been expected; Earle pitched finely, and put out several on slips. Yellott played well at centre field. McCartney played the first base in good style, as also did Brown on the second.

A Plea for the Northwestern Dispensary.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Northwestern Dispensary having been founded under the auspices of the "New-York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor," that institution has ever felt a deep interest in its increasing usefulness and prosperity. The Dispensary was established in 1852 to meet the pressing necessities of indigent sick in the northwestern portions of the City, and under the direction of an efficient Board of Managers it has gradually expanded its action until it has become one of the most useful charities in the City.

In the prosecution of its noble work, however, it has labored under peculiar difficulties and disadvantages. Unlike other kindred institutions in the City, it owns no Dispensary Building, and is, of course, without the facilities which an appropriate edifice would secure, besides bearing the constant burden of rent and the risk of being dislodged. Important and useful, moreover, as is the organization, its very existence is insecure until it has a building in fee under a charter, which will render the property legally inalienable to any other purpose. This is what is now needed to increase its facilities for usefulness, diminish its expenses, and give to it a permanent place among the benevolent institutions of the City. And this can only be done by private liberality; afterwards public funds may be its chief support.

Our Dispensary system may be considered nearly perfect. We have not only the most economical, but, probably, the best system for supplying the wants of the sick poor, of any city in the world. Were the character and necessities of this Dispensary fully understood by our citizens, their known liberality to deserving objects justifies the belief that one which so strongly appeals to their justice and humanity would commend itself to their favor. Whatever may be thought of other forms of charity, there can be but one opinion in regard to this. It occupies no debatable ground, nor will it, probably, be abused; for the poor are not likely to submit to surgical operations, nor to the action of physic, unless their physical condition calls for treatment. The two words, the "Sick Poor," imply the whole design, and express its charitable character. Whoever may be neglected, the indigent sick should not be. When the poverty-stricken within our reach are prostrated with disease, their relief is our first and most imperative duty. Having the ability and opportunity to help them, we cannot escape the obligation without incurring the Divine displeasure. In such a charity our ability is the measure of our duty. The dictates of Revelation, not less than the moral law of our constitution, demands this at our hands.

So obvious and urgent are the motives to carry out this enterprise, they need only be named to be appreciated.

It supplies skilful surgical and medical aid to thousands of the mechanic and laboring classes, in a part of the City that would be otherwise uncared for, and thus prevents a vast amount of sickness, suffering and premature mortality.

It preserves and promotes the prosperity of the community, by preserving and promoting the health of its members, and in the same ratio diminishes the burdens for the support of the indigent; for to recover a sick member of such a family, would be to recover, in many cases, the family from dependence, either by removing the chief cause of poverty, or by restoring the ability of self-support.

It prevents a vast amount of degradation and crime, consequent upon poverty and diminished moral and mental energy, which would otherwise attach to the well-known classes of society, and which, in turn, tax the time and energies of police officers, Courts and Asylums, and institutions for the reformation of the vicious.

It increases the respectability of neighborhoods and enhances the value of real estate, in the ratio that the foregoing moral, mental and physical results are secured.

It affords effectual protection against the spread of infectious diseases, and exercises a special guardianship over individual and public health.

It is, in short, one of those enterprises which the urgent necessities of the population and the law of humanity, not less than the spirit of the Gospel, requires.

It is full of promise for the future, a sowing of good seed, with the assurance of a long succession of harvests. No other benevolent undertaking is more needed in that part of the City, nor is there one, if sustained, more likely to confer great and lasting benefits, on large masses of our fellow-citizens.

About $20,000 will be required for the purchase of the ground and the erection of a building. As all incumbrance of debt should be avoided, no building will be commenced until two thirds of the amount is subscribed, when a Committee of the Managers will be chosen to carry out the design. The undersigned having no other than a philanthropic interest in the enterprise, earnestly commends it to the confidence of the benevolent.

MARITIME INTELLIGENCE.

Loss of a Boston Ship and Injury to a New-York Ship near Shanghae.

Correspondence of the Boston Herald.

U. S. Steamer Mississippi,
Woosung River, Tuesday, May 24, 1859.

By this heading you will perceive that we have not yet left China. The most important and painful news that I have to communicate is the total loss of the fine ship Vancouver, Capt. Wood, of Boston, owned by Bacon & Co., of that city. The accident happened on the evening of the 17th of May. She had taken on board a Chinese pilot, (said to have been unlicensed,) and was standing off towards the lightship in the Yang-tse River, followed by a Dutch ship. At 9 P.M., the Vancouver struck a reef or point of land about twenty miles from Gats-tof, knocking off her stern fast. In two hours she sank. The officers and crew took to the boats and were taken on board the Dutch ship. One poor fellow, Mr. John Clark Cannon, a seaman, of South Yarmouth, was sick at the time with fever, and in a very low state. With great difficulty he was got into a boat, wet through, and he, with Capt. Wood, the mate and two seamen, started for Shanghae, a distance of fifty miles, the sea breaking over the boat and rendering the sick man's situation very dangerous. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the next day, they came alongside of our vessel, the invalid looking as though his last day had come, and we immediately took him on board, supplied dry clothes and otherwise attended to his wants. Word was then passed forward for all who had any clothing for shipwrecked sailors to lay aft. In an instant our tars had their bags on the quarter-deck, and jackets, trowsers, shirts, hats, &c., were piled up sufficient for the use of fifty men at least. This collection was immediately sent to the rest of the shipwrecked sailors, with the addition of a large amount of provisions. Our jolly tars responded nobly to the calls of charity, and they indeed deserve well of their country. A junk was at once chartered by Capt. Nicholson, and five mariners, ten good sailors in charge of Midshipman T. B. Mills and Gunner William Beaver—all armed with muskets, cutlasses, pistols, &c.—and supplied with ammunition and provisions, were put on board of her, and she sailed for the scene of the disaster, to protect the property from the plundering of Chinese pirates.

At low tide the deck of the Vancouver was three feet out of water. A steamer and the schooner Wanderer were also sent down by Messrs. Heard & Co., to save what property they could. It is thought that her sails, rigging, spars, &c., and a portion of her cargo, (coal and dry goods) will be saved at a great expense. The ship will prove a total loss. Our boys, during their stay of four or five days near the wreck, worked manfully for the interests of all concerned.

On the following day, the splendid ship David Brown, of New-York, proceeded up Woosung River in charge of an English pilot, and towed by a steamer. As she proceeded up to her anchorage, near the City of Shanghae proper, she by some unknown cause ran into a point of land, known as the "Jetty," the result of which was disastrous. She immediately leaned full over, and filled with water. In doing this, she came in contact with the English gun-boat High-Flyer, taking out all the latter's spars. She also capsized a junk and badly injured two others. She will no doubt prove a total loss, but her cargo, which was small, will be saved in a damaged state. The blame of the disaster is attached to the pilot, while some assert that the current took her on to the fatal spot. She was the handsomest ship in the Chinese ports, from any nation, and the two accidents narrated by us have caused much excitement at Shanghae, and plenty of business for the wreckers. The crews of both ships were taken in charge and provided for by our Consul at Shanghae. It is reported that the light-ship had recently been removed to a more central location, and that this was the cause of the accident to the Vancouver.

The materials and a few bales of goods saved from the lost ship Vancouver have been sold at a great sacrifice.—the ship and cargo are a total loss. News has just reached us that the ship David Brown has been successfully hauled off, and that she will be saved, although it will require several thousands of dollars to repair her. Her cargo has been landed.

The Wreck of the Ship Sarah Minot—Letter from a Passenger.

The New-Orleans Picayune says:

"Our readers will remember the announcement made some time ago of the loss at sea by fire of the ship Sarah Minot, which left this port for Liverpool on the 23d of May. We have received from a gentleman who was on board the ill-fated vessel the following interesting particulars of the catastrophe:

"The weather had been delightful for several days, favorable winds prevailed, and we sailed at a good rate of speed, making from 7 to 13 knots an hour. On the 28th of June at 4 o'clock P. M., in lat. 48° lon. 23°, I was standing near the mainmast, looking over the starboard side at a sail to windward of us, when I was startled by the cry of fire! fire! The man at the wheel observed smoke coming up through the after hatchway, where the ship's stores were kept; he also noticed that thick smoke came through the ventilators; all hands immediately rushed aft, and a most energetic but ineffectual attempt was made to quench the fire by throwing water down the after hatchway, where the fire was supposed to have originated. The first officer soon found that the whole of the after part of the ship was on fire. The probability is that it was caused by natural combustion, and had been smouldering in the cotton hold for some time previous to having broken out. It soon became obvious to the officers that it would be impossible to save the ship, therefore orders were given to close up all the available ventilators, and make the hatchways as tight as possible by filling up the interstices with cotton. It became evident that the fire was making rapid progress, and notwithstanding every precaution, she was now on fire fore and aft. The deck was becoming so hot as to render it uncomfortable to the feet, and the water that was pumped out of the main tank was almost boiling hot. The boats were now placed in the davits, and the long boat was also launched; all hands were executing the orders of the officers with the utmost alacrity, and officers and men deserved the highest praise for the efficiency displayed by them on an emergency so trying.

"The weather had now become very unpleasant; a misty rain had been falling for some time, but at 5 o'clock P. M. it cleared up a little, and a sight was presented to us that thrilled our very souls with transports of joy. The cry of "A sail! a sail!" seemed to inspire all with the most inexpressible joy, as every countenance lit up with anxious expectation, as if doubting the truth of our good fortune. The sail was on our weather beam; she was bearing down upon us, having evidently seen our signal of distress in the mizzen rigging. The order was now given to heave the main top-sail to the mast, and in a few minutes we saw the friendly sail cross our stern. She proved to be the bark Retriever, of London, Capt. Robinson Waite, bound to Liverpool from Barbados. We saved as much provision as could be obtained out of the burning ship, and at 6½ o'clock P. M. all on board the ill-fated ship Sarah Minot—twenty-seven in number—were rescued, together with nearly all the personal effects of passengers and crew. We were most hospitably received on board the bark by the captain and his wife, by whom every possible provision was made for our comfort. After all sail had been taken in we laid by in order to witness the final scene of this most dire catastrophe. The ensign was still unfurled to the breeze from the mizzen rigging; the main and mizzen masts soon went by the board, and the once noble ship Sarah Minot was enveloped in flames, presenting a spectacle at once melancholy and magnificent, as the flames towered to the sky and illumined the sea for miles around the scene of the conflagration. It was painful to witness the emotion of Capt. Winslow as he leaned over the rail on the quarter deck; he could not repress his tears as he took a last and look at his ship as she was going down to the hungry sea. On the 8th of July we descried the Skelligs, on the west coast of Ireland, and reached Liverpool on Saturday, the 9th of July. E. J. D.

A vigorous effort has been set on foot in Detroit to break up the houses of prostitution. An establishment on Lafayette-street was cleared a few days ago, and the officers have their eye upon others. The Tenth Ward of the city appears to have been especially infested.

UNION-SQUARE AND FIFTH-AV., CORNER 24TH-ST., MURRAY HILL.
This institution, established in 1848, has occupied successively locations in Colonnade-row, Lafayette-place, Washington-square, and University-place.
The present spacious edifice on Union-square was erected for it twelve years since, and was the original nucleus of the Institution—Library, Philosophical and Astronomical Apparatus, Laboratory, and Works of Art, incurred an investment of not less than Eighty Thousand Dollars.
In addition to the above, to meet the increasing wants of the Institution, the celebrated mansion and grounds (six lots,) on the Fifth-av., corner of 24th-st., Murray Hill, have now been purchased with special reference to the wants and comfort of the Higher classes—the conditions for great extent, and young ladies wishing to pursue an advanced course in general reading, History, Literature, Languages, Music and Art.
At Union-square, special attention will be given to the other classes of the Collegiate, the Academic, and the Primary Departments, preparatory to their promotion. For the convenience, however, of those residing near other locations, the same provision will be made at each for pupils of every grade and class.
The privileges and course of instruction will be almost identical, under the same supervision, and to a great extent, conducted by the same teachers; so that parallel classes will be only sections of the same, and the Seniors at commencement, will graduate together. Interesting exercises and entertainments, at either place, will sometimes be shared by the members of both sections of the classes for whom they are intended.
The Autumn session at Union-square will commence on Wednesday, Sept. 14; at Murray Hill, on Wednesday, Sept. 21.

The Sickles' Case Exaggerated by Distance.

From the London Saturday Review.

It is difficult, and more than difficult, to fathom, or even to apprehend, the great American mind in its popular aspect. What it seems to reproduce on the most exaggerated scale is the manner of life and the domestic habits of English village society. The same taste for scandal and gossiping, the same pretentious self-important estimate of their own petty local concerns, the same habit in which everybody indulges, of conversing everybody else's business, characterises our Transatlantic cousins and our own rural communities. That America has no stake in general politics and is the country of nations, that it has a very cheap Press, and that most of its life is spent in talking between one drinking-bars, accounts for the fact that the conversation which agitate public opinion and impregnate public talk are of a character infinitely small and degradingly personal and petty. A low moral tone always prevails in a narrow society. A small English country town is the epitome in its general talk and local interest of all that is narrow-minded. And the United States reproduce this. The American newspapers only print what the market-place, and tea-table, and the reading room of one of our own agricultural towns indulge in. Were it not for the scale on which public interests are pitched in England by our connection with a large and elevating system such as that which the great European political family involves, we might, perhaps, with our cheap newspapers, be soon brought down to the American standard. Foreign politics keep us from stagnating into the scum of American public matters. The United States is not yet a great nation; and hence it is that a great murder or a great adultery case, or a very remarkable Barnum dodge, occupies the whole community with general talk for six months.

Mr. Seward, the honorable gentleman who filled his wife's paramour in a very cold blooded and business like way in the streets of Washington, is again the one subject of universal public concern and interest throughout the United States—or rather he has never ceased to be before the American public. The American public took kindly to Mr. Sickles; and Mr. Sickles certainly took kindly to American publicity. The two were eminently suited for each other. There was just that amount of sympathy which was mutually attractive. The one liked to afford a public topic, and the other found in Mr. Sickles a congenial article. The cause which first brought him into notoriety was an event commonplace enough; and, though it had no romance, it might readily be invested with that sort of interest which exactly suits a nation eminently given over to gossiping and petty scandal. The excitement about Mr. Sickles and his wife and his wife's lover, was of the most depraved and unhealthy character. It disgusted while it characterised the whole people.

The question as to the degree of guilt incurred by a husband in assassinating an adulterer is not a very easy one. Like most other moral questions, it depends a good deal upon circumstances; no general rule can, or ought to be, laid down about it. To slaughter an adulterer may be, in a moral estimate, almost anything, from very foul murder to very justifiable homicide. But this was not the way in which the public talk of America dealt with the great Sickles case. Mr. Sickles represented a principle; and that principle, as settled by the American mind—at least as represented by the American newspapers, by the American counsel, and by the American verdict on the trial of Mr. Sickles for murder—is that it is a high kind of duty in a husband to pistol, after due deliberation, the dishonorer of his bed, as the slang phrase is. Of this principle Sickles was the hero. It is a very doubtful and questionable principle indeed—one neither to be laid down broadly nor argued over constitutionally. Still it was adopted by American public opinion, and Mr. Sickles embodied it. It was taken up as a great tribute to domestic morality. The pure ought the marriage relation to be that its infringement could only be washed out in blood. Very great and all talk this, but very questionable morally. After all, supposing it to be true, which it is not, all this was a very one-sided estimate of adultery. If adultery is to be punished with death, judicial or extra-judicial, one can see no reason why it should be one sided. It may be doubted whether, in most cases of adultery or so-called seduction, the guilt is not pretty equally divided between the man and the woman. We certainly never wished to see Mr. Sickles hung by an indignant public virtue, or lynched by a caucus jury of matrons; but we cannot quite understand why one party is always the victim and the other the villain too black to live, which is both the American and the English estimate of these cases. But, side by side with the indignation against the heartless seducer there was, as is usual, a large amount of popular sympathy with Mr. Sickles. Mrs. Sickles, after the discovery of her guilt, was said to have done some very romantic and edifying things. She sent back her wedding-ring, and wrote some wonderful letters, which, of course, were published and talked about through the Union. Mrs. Sickles was quite as representative a person as her husband. She suited public sympathy, because she was a fine subject for public talk. And so it has turned out that this pair, so suited to each other, because so suited to the same thing—namely American sentiment—have come together again. Mr. Sickles represented martial indignation—Mrs. Sickles represented conjugal repentance. Of course there is a good deal to be said for either—dulce et decorum est. It is a subject for themes and leading articles, where there is nothing of larger and nobler interest to discuss. We are not going to canvass the question except in a very cursory way. We do not say that all avenging husbands are wrong in taking the law into their own hands—though we do say that Mr. Sickles ought to have been judged by the law, and not by a theory of domestic necessities. But when he had once pistolled his man, and had been tried and acquitted for the murder, there was an end of him as a public character. One would have thought that, as an American citizen, he had done his best for his country by furnishing it with an occasion of small-talk and very small moral disquisition for six months. Having celebrated himself once, he might have lived on his celebrity.

But a nobler future was reserved for Mr. Sickles. Whether it was that he was himself attracted by the same soft infection which enlisted American feeling in favor of his wife—or whether, as we have said, it was by some necessity of the case that two public notables should attract each other—or whether it was that, so pleased was Mr. Sickles with being the object of universal discussion, that he resolved to keep himself and his private concerns before the public—for either or all of these reasons Mr. Sickles has thought fit to forgive his guilty wife, and to restore her to bed and board. We do not say that the wish to become the subject of American interest was connected with Mr. Sickles' romantic conduct; but it is just the sort of incident which is eminently suited for American sentimentality. It can be discussed, and certainly is discussed, with a very keen and general interest, both on abstract grounds and as regards the individuals. We are not going to give a judgment on the antecedent question. To forgive an adulteress is an heroic height of charity which is not given to all men; and perhaps it is as well that this sublime virtue is generally found to be unattainable by ordinary husbands—though to forgive and to cohabit with an adulteress are not quite the same thing. The Laureate, in his recent volume, has touched the theme, and marked the distinction with his usual refined delicacy and precision. The Arthur of Tennyson, we must say, is the very opposite of Sickles, both in his bloody revenge and in his astounding and exuberant facility of reconciliation. Mr. Sickles is a very copper-gilt hero, both as an avenger and in his good mercy. Still, we do not say that Mr. Sickles is wrong, though of course, in his case, such conduct is wonderfully inconsistent; and the argument, not against the injured but forgiving husband in the abstract, but against this Mr. Sickles in particular, is terribly strong. If the guilt of adultery was so atrocious, then Mrs. Sickles had committed an unpardonable sin, and her husband ought not to have "restored her to his confidence and protection," as he prettily puts it—if penitence and pardon are so lovely—Mr. Sickles himself was guilty of the cruellest of murders in cutting off Mrs. Sickles' paramour from the opportunity for the same edifying conversion which she has exhibited. We repeat that we say nothing of the case itself. Mrs. Sickles may be the most sincere of penitents, though, under the circumstances, no other line but that of "the erring and penitent wife" was open to her; and Mr. Sickles may be perfectly right in taking her back. We know so little about the particular case that we give no opinion. It is a matter of morality to which we cannot apply a general canon without more intimate knowledge than we possess. It is a matter of taste which is no concern of ours. But it is a question of special and personal concern to the American public mind. America takes up the affair very warmly. It is disappointed in its hero. The injured husband and the dire vindicator of conjugal purity has shown himself too easy or too forgiving by half. America has no patience with Mr. Sickles. At least ten articles a day are written against Sickles and his domestic reunion. And Mr. Sickles has written to the newspapers vindicating his forgiveness on very high and transcendental sentimental grounds. His defence was quite uncalled for. He had a perfect right to please himself. What he should have denounced and defied was the tribunal of public opinion. Public opinion had really nothing to do with Mr. Sickles' unusual domestic tastes and his abnormal legal arrangements. We much regret when anybody—be he American senator or English novelist—either when he quarrels with his wife or arranges sentimental difficulties, to speak euphemistically, appeals the public, or permits the public to make itself a party to the concerns of private life. It is only a low and vulgar morality which can either endure or urge the appeal. The husband who challenges the court of publicity, and the public which permits itself to interfere and to canvass such matters, are alike to blame. We hardly know which most to find fault with—the interference with Mr. Sickles' private life, or Mr. Sickles' vindication of what is the concern of the human being but himself. But to conclude with what we began, it is only in Little Pedlington and the United States that Mr. and Mrs. Sickles could furnish a subject of national interest.

Mr. Wise's Last Balloon Ascension:

SCIENTIFIC OBSERVATIONS IN MID-AIR.

Mr. John Wise is as prolific of long letters as his Virginia namesake. No sooner does he come down from one of his airy flights than he falls to writing a two-column description. His last effort is an elaborate statement concerning his voyages from Lafayette, Ind., which were undertaken consecutively on the 16th and 17th August. Mr. Wise kept a log of these voyages, and publishes extracts therefrom. We quote a part of his narrative:

"Looking over my car I found myself still over the City of Lafayette. Here the test paper showed very slight signs of the presence of ozone, and I smelt it distinctly as I passed a cloud in coming down to a barometer of 24. After I had descended to the lowermost stratum, I discharged ballast and rose up till the barometer stood 21. The Wabash now presented the appearance of a crooked thread of water, and Jupiter was again stationary in space. Here my log reads thus: 'If I can't make a trip East I will make one somewhere else. I feel rejoiced—invigorated—extremely happy! God is all around me—Astra Castra, Numen Castra.' The manifestations around me make me rejoice in exclamation and admiration of God's exalted handiwork. Glorious reverie—this feeling is worth a life-time's laudation of a thousand-mile trip.'

3 o'clock 35 minutes—Just got through one of those sarcastic freaks that put all experience at defiance; after shoveling overboard nearly fifty pounds of sand, and the balloon, from a completely filled condition of a few minutes previous, is now quite fleeced in her lower hemisphere, and is brought to a stand at a barometer of 25.6.

Shouts of people discernible—cross paper tinged brown—breeze fluttering around me—cow-bells jingling below—wood-chopping plainly heard—my ears begin to ache most violently, and shouts upon shouts proceed from below—moving slightly west of south—I will descend and see what the people are shouting so for.

Here I come down, sixteen miles below Lafayette, in the midst of Grand Prairie. The people soon flocked together—men, women and children. I gave them each a slice of bread, and distributed to them newspapers, and pamphlets descriptive of the mineral and medical properties of the Lafayette artesian water. After resting here about twenty minutes, I put the air-ship in balanced trim, so that it just glided over the top of the prairie grass, and the people all followed it as it slowly drifted along at a common pace, until I tipped out a little sack of sand to make it surmount a fence, and then the upreaching Jupiter made most wonder-stricken upturned faces. As the air-ship ascended, I waved the American flag, and my prairie audience, of about thirty strong, gave a hearty hurrah.

The balloon had now been emptied to half its capacity, which left remaining about 100 pounds of sand ballast, and with this I was determined to feel for the great eastern current above. I made very little headway as the balloon gradually rose. In twenty minutes after I left the prairie barometer stood at 19.

The thermometer stood here at 55°, and yet the reflected rays of the sun would strike me like hot tin. Brilliant bands of thread-like beams were darting from a portion of this vast circular group of clouds towards the earth. The world below was obscured by a gossamer-like mist between the clouds. There was a profound silence. I could hear distinctly the arterial palsations of my system. It went much like the vibration of a mill-dam. The Jupiter appeared to stand still in the midst of this grand heaven-clad council. I was glad of it. The tympans of my ears were flapping like topsails of a ship in squalls. These nimbus clouds appeared to be all setting on a common level, as though they were planted on a great circular rim or plate; a few floating within the open part of this cloud basement. Here I discovered that my vision had become keen. I could read the figured vernier of my instruments without eye glasses. Having a pamphlet with me—Pouillet Muller's Lehrbuch der Physic und Meteorologie, which had on the cover very fine print, and which I could not read with the naked eye on the surface of the earth, I could here without glasses with facility. My ears were for a while just the reverse, but they too became more steady in the course of half an hour; the base of my brain suffered a little pain all the while. It must have been caused by the removal of atmospheric pressure. My eyes would thus become more convexe. I can account for it in no other way.

These persistent nimbus clouds, standing, apparently, in a circular form, without motion or alteration, puzzle my comprehension. Neither increase nor diminution accompanied them. Nature had taken a rest over Grand Prairie, and pavilioned it with a garment of the most brilliant costume that reflected and refracted light could invest it with. Behind this great belt of cloud-pyramids, there appeared an azure colored ring or outer belt, seen between the pyramidical pillars; and to the east only, there appeared a sheet of inclined stratus clouds.

Could the great prairie have anything to do with this? I never saw its like before in so striking and characteristic a form. I have seen the nimbus often in groups, but they were always changing, both in place and shape, as well as in dissolution and composition, but in this, as stated above, the whole mass was stationary.

Above here there was not the slightest manifestation of ozone. The paper kept its unaltered white color. My nose suffered very much from its membranes becoming parched, and although the atmosphere was cold, being at 53° in the shade, and barometer at 18°, there appeared to be something, present or absent, that produced in my system the phenomenon of fever. My lips were swollen and parched, my flesh was all unwrinkled, smooth, and filled out under the skin like a youth's.

There appeared to be stagnation in the atmosphere, and the impression was inevitably forced upon me that nature had an atmospheric circulation necessary to its proper order, as the animal system had of blood necessary to its healthfulness. Withal, I felt intensely happy—somewhat like under the influence of a dose of nitrous oxide gas.

My companions, the flies, were aroused up here by my searching for food, having become hungry. They flew in very short, spasmodic flights, buzzing rather loudly, and evidently felt discommoded for the want of atmospheric stability.

Finding the Jupiter now intensely distended, by a warning that always draws the attention of the aeronaut to an observation of his balloon—that is, the network suddenly slipping a little from where it is too taut to where it is too loose. This action at so great a height, where all is silence most profound, causes a noise like distant thunder. Looking down to the earth through the vast chasms of the clouds, I discovered by the aid of my compass that I was sailing due east. Thus the upper eastern current was attained at a barometrical height, (being my last barometrical observation,) of 17.6—being nearly three miles altitude. JOHN WISE.

Iniquity in St. Louis.

RIOTOUS PROCEEDINGS OF CYPRIANS AT A PUBLIC HALL.

The St. Louis Democrat, Aug. 20, describes a scene which occurred at Mozart Hall, in that city, on Friday evening:

"Last night we made another visit to that choicest of all places—Mozart Hall. We were prompted to trace our steps towards that renowned quarter by the rumor of an intended storming of the notable Hall. We have heretofore given the citizens of St. Louis fully to understand the extent of the iniquity. We arrived at the Hall about 10 o'clock. There were not a great many present, but enough however to make it interesting to such as delighted in those sports. Some six or eight sets were upon the floor, and the music of the orchestra chimed to the call for a cotillion. As for the crowd—we mention only the females—they were by no means bound by the ordinary rules of decency and etiquette. The absence of all such is a noticeable feature in Mozart Hall. In a former article, published in our first issue, we gave a daguerreotype of the characters who congregate in that chamber of filth, where pollution is as a great deep; see with its mantistrom and breakers.

Things went off well enough until the bell rang for supper. Up to that time but one or two skirmishes had occurred, and those between the Cyprians. As is universally the case, the band performed a march before the supper-room door was opened, after which several of the fair ones, with their escorts, proceeded to the lower apartment, where supper is generally served up. Three or four of the women had disappeared down the stairway when a man, one of the employes of the place, was seen to rush from below, and upon reaching the ball-room, sped with lightning swiftness along the floor to the main entrance, at the door of which was stationed the proprietor. A few words were exchanged, and then a grand run was made by several policemen for the supper-room. Before they reached the stairway they were met by the returning women, who came bounding up the stairs screaming with fright, and rushing in wild disorder across the ball-room to the dressing-room in the front end of the building. To add to the confusion there was heard at the same time a smashing of crockery in the room below, breaking of boards, stoning of the window-panes of the ball-room itself, and the firing of a pistol. We were soon in possession of the fact that the fight was occasioned by a crowd of men who had broken into the supper-room, and had overturned the supper-table nearest the door, with its contents of cold chicken and ham, sausages and bread. Having committed this depredation upon the crockery and the eatables, the marauders retired. During the excitement the men in the ball-room partook of the fright in common with the women. Some got under the benches and tables—all stood clear of the windows, through which now, like a shower of hail, came gravel and rocks. It was now that the employes of the management, with a number of policemen, manifested considerable activity in protecting the ball-room from the besieging efforts of the outsiders. One excited individual seized upon a huge sabre, and, brandishing it to the right and left, swore he would cut down the first man who dared to enter without a ticket. His valor was responded to by a shower of rocks upon the window-panes, and, rushing up to one of the windows, he fired a pistol through the aperture at the crowd.

In the meantime, two or three individuals who were suspected of having entered the hall without paying the usual fee, were thrust outside, and others who occasionally managed to get inside the door were summarily ejected. After a short interval of indescribable confusion the orchestra struck up a waltz and the excitement of the hour oscillated between the pleasures of the dance and the belligerent demonstrations of the outsiders. Of these latter there were some two or three hundred. They were mostly men who had congregated for the purpose of wreaking upon the managers of Mozart the full measure of their virtuous indignation, and paying off at one score the accumulated debts of a long season. It is alleged these debts existed in the nature of continued mistreatment beyond the capacity of men to endure.

But the dance was not allowed to proceed for any length of time without several fights. Insults were given, and if manfully resented a grand melee would occur, in which, by the assistance of several policemen, some one would be thrust out of doors. Two Cyprians got into a row. One applied to another a brutal epithet, which No. 2 resented by seizing the hair of No. 1. Shrieking and shouting preceded a general rush for the scene of battle, and efforts were made to separate the females, which for some length of time proved ineffectual. No 1 was whipped, and, being taken up senseless, was carried to the window, where cold-water application soon restored her. No. 2 strutted about in all the pride of victory and in self-eulogy indulged in language which defies parallel in obscenity.

After some few skirmishes the grand finale of the night occurred, which resulted in the turning off of the gas and putting an end to further disturbance. Three or four policemen had in custody an individual who had just claims to admission, but was accused of being an outsider. Having been struck on the head with a cane, he resented the blow, but was at once seized by the police. While struggling to free himself a private watchman employed by the proprietors, rushed up to him and discharged a pistol at his head. The ball missed its object, and the person who discharged it drew another and threatened to shoot the first man who interfered with him. While this was transpiring several policemen rushed in with their clubs, and any individual who was secure in their grasp, was conveyed to the Station-house. The crowd outside and inside demanded the arrest of the watchman who had discharged the pistol, and a charge having been preferred against him, he was committed to the Station-house. At this time it was about 2½ o'clock. The crowd, in a body, followed the police as they escorted the offender to a cell at the north end of the Station, shouting and uttering bitter imprecations upon his head.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 24—P. M.

The general tone of the Stock Exchange continues to gain strength, and prices this afternoon, after some fluctuations through the day, on the Railroad shares, leave off firm. The business at the early Board was moderately active, and the sales well distributed. The Bear account sold with more freedom than on Monday and Tuesday, and several of the Railroad stocks were offered down on sellers' option 30@60 days, thereby affecting the cash price to the extent of ¼@½ ⅌ cent. But all this decline was recovered from after the adjournment and at the Second Board, and on New-York Central the demand was, if anything, stronger than at any time since the rise began. The buyers are better distributed than usual, and the impression gains ground that the improvement in the traffic of the line is not only the earliest of the season, but is likely to be the most substantial for the stockholders—the concern being free from all pecuniary embarrassment after paying out the ascertained net earnings of the six months ending 1st August. In this view of the case, the temporary reduction of the half yearly dividend to 3 ⅌ cent, seems to have strengthened the speculative confidence of the Street in the future of the stock. The influence of the steady rise and demand is felt on the Western shares, nearly all of which withstood the attempt at reaction by the short sellers to-day remarkably well. New-York Central closed 73¾@73¾, after selling in the morning at 73¼; Michigan Guaranteed, 24¾; Galena, 66½; Rock Island, 64¾; Toledo, 22¾; Michigan Central, 44; the last the only Western stock which fell back materially from the advance of yesterday. In State Stocks, Missouris were ½ firmer, and Tennessees weaker. The Erie mortgages were again in request and firm, while the Michigan Southern Seconds were sold down on sellers' option to 43@44 ⅌ cent. Illinois Construction Bonds firm at 89 ⅌ cent. Delaware and Hudson, Pennsylvania Coal, Cumberland and Reading were all steady, the first two offered in small parcels only. The shares of the Panama and Pacific Mail Companies left off firm; the mutual arrangement entered into for starting the North Atlantic line of steamers hence to Aspinwall having been completed to the satisfaction of the Directors of both concerns, besides absorbing about 4,500 shares of the Pacific Mail in part payment for the Collins steamers, which are to constitute the new line, on a capital of $900,000. This line is to be under charge of seven Directors, consisting, it is said, of Messrs. RAYMOND, ASPINWALL, WHITEWRIGHT, CHAUNCEY, BARTLETT, RUSSELL and SOUTTER, all of whom are already in the management of one or both of the old Companies. Pacific sold this afternoon at 78¼ cash, and Panama at 115½, buyer 30 days. The general market left off very firm.

We have little to add to our report of yesterday on the steady appearance of the Money Market at Bank. The outside lenders to-day are accepting, in some instances, 5@5½ ⅌ cent. on demand loan to the Brokers, and are also taking very choice mercantile paper, falling due this side o January, at the Bank rate of 7 ⅌ cent. The Exchange and Bullion engagements for the mail steamers of Saturday are scarcely yet discussed. Bills on London are 109¾@110, and on Paris 5.16¼f @5.15f. The shipments of Gold and Silver, which are not expected to be heavy, will depend upon the arrivals nearly due from New-Orleans and California.

Of Money affairs in Boston, the Morning Post of that city remarks:

"In New-York money is becoming easier, but in Boston the demand is evidently increasing, and rates are quietly but certainly advancing. The banks find no difficulty in getting 7@8 ⅌ cent. on foreign paper, the former figure expressing the price at the larger institutions, for considerable sums. At the same time, certain notes are passed without much trouble at 6 ⅌ cent. and a brokerage, and first-class parties find no difficulty in borrowing on call, at 6 ⅌ cent. We should quote very prime Boston paper at 5@7 ⅌ cent., acceptable foreign paper at 7@8, and loans on stocks at 9@16 ⅌ cent., according to the accompanying name, margin, and quality of security.

The best class of Sterling Exchange is fairly firm at 10 ⅌ cent., whether freight bills or bankers' bills, drawn to order. The bankers buy at 9¾@9⅞.

New-York funds are not in superabundant supply, but the demand is not active, and, upon the whole, Exchange seems to rule in favor of Boston.

Business is scarcely so lively as what it was last week."

From the following report of the Louisville Democrat it would seem that the recent decree of sale of the Covington and Lexington Road, under the Second Mortgage, is to be appealed from to the highest Court of the State:

"We have already stated, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, the fact that Judge Goodson, of the Fayette County Circuit, granted a decree for the sale of the Covington and Lexington Railroad on the 5th of October. Yesterday we learned the fact that the stockholders are taking active measures to prevent the sale. Able lawyers are employed, and the stockholders of Harrison and Bourbon Counties are not only contributing to the expense, but are signing the bond necessary to be given to carry the case before the Court of Appeals of Kentucky for review. The sale will be resisted to the last by those who will be entirely cut off by the decree of sale, which many legal gentlemen regard as very extraordinary. A bond of probably one hundred thousand dollars will be required, but that can be readily obtained.

One fact in connection with the decision has given much dissatisfaction, and occasioned unfavorable comments upon the course of Judge Goodson. The argument of the case occupied some four days, during which time voluminous authorities were quoted by the ablest counsel engaged, which authorities were handed to the Court for examination. The argument closed on Saturday. On Monday, Judge Goodson held his Court as usual, and on that evening announced his decision.

It would, perhaps, be unjust to intimate that the little time devoted to the examination of the authorities having a bearing upon the many important questions submitted, denoted a foregone conclusion; but the stockholders feel that their rights have been cavalierly disposed of, and are determined to seek a remedy in the highest Court of the State. Judge Goodson may have all the law "at his fingers' ends," and, therefore, committed no error in his decision; but the stockholders will resist that decision to the bitter end, whatever it may be. It is pretty safe to predict that the Covington and Lexington Railroad will not be sold on the day designated in the decree."

The managers of some of the Missouri banks are not acting creditably in the redemption of their circulating notes, which, on account of the scarcity of exchange, are returning upon them for gold. In some instances Silver change, which is known to be below the standard, is tendered in place of gold, and in others a popular excitement is raised against the exchange dealers who present the notes. In the case of the Chilocothe Branch of the State Bank, a committee of citizens make proclamation that no further demands for gold from the brokers will be permitted! It would seem to be the duty, as it certainly would be to the credit, of the principal banks at St. Louis to interfere against this sort of proceeding, especially as its branch notes are not secured by State Stocks, and the holders have no summary redress. The concern has heretofore stood very high, and part of its new stock was taken up on recommendation of the press, last year, in New-York. Besides all this, the previous reputation of Missouri banking had given the Banks a free currency in Indiana, Ohio, &c., and the circumstance that a Cincinnati money dealer is threatened with Lynch law while peaceably seeking to make his exchanges at the counter, will assuredly result in discrediting nearly all Missouri currency out of the State, if not to a material extent at home. The last demonstration, which was against a Missouri holder, is thus noticed by the St. Louis Republican:

"Scarcely a paper reaches us from the interior which is not paying some attention to what it—apparently in common with the people in the neighborhood of the country banks—considers as runs upon those institutions. The second call, on Tuesday, at the Chillicothe Bank, by the agent of parties who presented on the Saturday previous at the same bank a quantity of its notes in the name of Mr. Bazan, of Hannibal, resulted as unsuccessfully as the first. The President was perfectly willing to redeem the bills presented, and met the agent, Mr. Bazan, at a room in the bank building on Tuesday night for the purpose. But it seems that the citizens got scent of the inter view, and invested the building, into which a number of them made their way. Again, as before, accosting the agent, they apprised him that he could not be permitted to carry his gold away. The agent, after consultation with some friends who had accompanied him, finally concluded to yield to these representations, and came away without the money. Such is the statement as we have seen it set forth in a letter from the agent."

The Erie Railroad and its Obligations.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your Correspondent, under the signature of "W.," in the TIMES of the 16th inst., says that "the unsecured bondholders of the Erie Railroad could offer no opposition to a foreclosure, as they are but ordinary creditors, having no lien upon the property.

Can he be seriously under an impression that such special loans as those, formally contracted, to sustain and perpetuate this road, and designated, "Convertible bonds of 1871," "Convertible bonds of 1862," and Sinking Fund bonds of 1875," being the third, fourth, and sixth loans negotiated, were made by the lenders, without regard to any tangible equivalent, or any legal personal responsibility whatever?

On what or whose security does he think these millions were provided, and reliance reposed for refunding them, if not on the road property itself, and on that only?

He appears to confound mortgages from corporations, where there is no personal responsibility, with those executed by individuals who are personally bound.

The road being without volition, is provided by law with organs of action, who, free from liability for its debts themselves, have authority to bind it, as the only security for all its obligations, giving due preference to those of anterior dates progressively.

These millions were incorporated in, and formed a part of, the road property at the several periods when they were borrowed; consequently, that property alone, in the absence of any other liability, became from the date of the loan a dead pledge to the lenders, as tenants in mortgage, subject only to its bonds, or debts previously contracted.

Reference to the circulars, and to the various publications emanating from the organs of this property, at the times when subscriptions to these common bonds (as by some they are called,) to save it from imminent danger of dilapidation, were solicited, will show irrefutable evidence that the property and emoluments remaining, after fulfilling previous conscientiously, were considered as solemnly "pledged," first and wholly, to the payment of the loan then being negotiated. EQUITY.

The Erie Creditors.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your correspondent, "W," is, I think, more belligerent than wise. His assertion of its being the right of an individual debtor to take from a creditor to whom he was previously indebted, a lien upon his assets by a subsequent mortgage, is, as every lawyer knows, not unfrequently prosecuted as a fraud, and is sometimes the subject of injunction by the Courts to protect the equitable rights of other parties.

In such cases, it sometimes happens that the character of the mortgager enters into the examination o testimony—as in a criminal case—and has its influence with the Court, although the restrictions of law upon individuals press with less force than upon incorporated Companies. Such Companies, your correspondent must know, are the creatures of law. They live and operate by the conditions expressed in the law. Their right to mortgage their property, nobody, I believe, intends to question; but as their property is the only guarantee they can offer to secure their loans, it seems to follow as an unavoidable result that they cannot equitably deprive prior loans of their priority of right to the avails of property upon which such loans were based. The first and second mortgage bonds are, without doubt, exclusive liens upon the assets of the Company. The third, fourth, and fifth, will doubtless be subjects of litigation in case of foreclosure, and unless the receiver, Mr. MASON, guards himself against imposition from a quarter too imperious to be right—the high confidence with which he has been intrusted may be a source of more plague than profit.
